

The complaint

Mr Y complains that Options UK Personal Pensions LLP (formerly Carey Pensions) ('Options') shouldn't have accepted a transfer of his occupational pension scheme into a self-invested personal pension ('SIPP').

What happened

Whilst working abroad, Mr Y was approached by a representative of an unregulated pensions advisory company, Caledonian International Associates. The representative made promises of providing a higher return on his pension than Mr Y's current scheme. As a result, Mr Y transferred his armed forces pension to an Options SIPP.

I'll set out below a high-level background to what happened, although as the parties are both fully aware of the details to this complaint, I don't intend to repeat everything that has already been rehearsed in correspondence between the parties and set out in our investigators' opinions.

Mr Y had a defined benefit armed forces occupational pension following his time in military service. In 2012, Mr Y was working abroad when a representative of Caledonian approached him and some of his colleagues, several whom also had armed forces pension plans. Mr Y has told us that they said the rate of return on those pensions was poor and they'd be better to transfer to a SIPP in which could be held an investment that would provide a greater financial return – and hence a better pension benefit. Mr Y says that the improved return they talked about was 8% net a year.

Mr Y had no financial expertise and was persuaded through Caledonian's advice to transfer his pension to an Options SIPP. This took place in late 2012, when Caledonian's representative met up with Mr Y to finalise matters when he was back in the UK on leave. The new SIPP and investments were set up by Options in early 2013. The investments are held in a bond wrapper provided by a regulated entity, Friends Provident International ('FPI').

Mr Y is unhappy because he thinks that Options should have recognised that Caledonian had been providing him with advice to transfer a defined benefit pension to a SIPP, something that the regulator, the Financial Conduct Authority ('FCA'), views in most instances to be inherently unsuitable. Mr Y was unaware that Caledonian wasn't regulated by the FCA (then the Financial Services Authority ('FSA')), to provide financial advice and thinks Options should have made him aware of the risks of this - and so not accepted the transfer. He says that he just signed the pre-completed forms he was given by Caledonian and trusted that the advice he'd been given, by what he later found out to be an unregulated and unqualified advisor, was sound.

Mr Y signed conflicting paperwork with Options in which he confirmed in one document that he'd been advised by Caledonian and in others that he hadn't had any advice. Options has described this as a clerical error on its part. And it says that it provided execution only services to Mr Y, made it clear to him that it wasn't providing any advice and recommended that he approach an independent financial adviser.

Mr Y's investments haven't achieved the returns promised and carried high fees. Mr Y has said he'd never have taken out this investment if he'd known how high the fees were. And he now knows the investment is unlikely to provide him with a better return than his original armed forces pension. And the benefits are likely to be worse.

Options says that with the SIPP, Mr Y is better able to benefit from pensions freedoms, can take his pension at 55 rather than 60, will be able to leave his pension pot to his chosen beneficiary after his death and be able to take a 25% tax-free lump sum on reaching retirement age. So, it doesn't think he's suffered a loss. And in any event, it disagrees that it's done anything wrong in terms of the due diligence it carried out on Caledonian and the actions it took on Mr Y's direct instruction.

Options says that it was acting on an 'execution' only basis for Mr Y. It gave him warnings about what this meant and told him that he should seek independent financial advice. Options also says that it agreed with Caledonian that Caledonian wouldn't provide any advice to customers. And it didn't think that it was.

Our investigator thought that the due diligence that Options undertook on Caledonian was deficient. If Options had carried out its obligations properly, it would have recognised that Caledonian was likely to be providing unsuitable advice to Mr Y, contrary to regulation. It should also have seen that there was a significant risk of consumer detriment in accepting instructions from Caledonian - and hence it shouldn't have accepted any business from it. So, he recommended that Mr Y's complaint be upheld. And compensation be paid. Options didn't agree. So, the matter has come to me for a decision.

I'll summarise below the relationship between the various parties and how that led to Mr Y's pension being transferred to the Options SIPP.

The entities involved

Options UK Personal Pensions LLP

Options is a SIPP provider and administrator. It was regulated by the FSA at the time of the events complained about – now the FCA. It was – and still is – authorised to arrange (bring about) deals in investments; deal in investments as principal; establish, operate and wind up a personal pension scheme; and make arrangements with a view to transactions in investments.

Caledonian

Caledonian was the trading name of MMG Associates which was registered in the British Virgin Islands. Caledonian wasn't authorised in the UK to undertake regulated activities and it doesn't appear on the FCA's Financial Services Register. There is no evidence it was authorised to carry out such activities in any other jurisdiction.

Business C

Business C is an investment manager based in the Isle of Man. The evidence is that Business C agreed to manage or provide oversight of investments taken out by Caledonian's customers after they had transferred their pensions. I shall call the individual representing Business C, who is mentioned in this decision, Mr P.

Friends Provident International (FPI)

FPI is registered in the Isle of Man. It provided a bond wrapper known as Zenith which allowed investment in several funds with different fund providers. Mr Y invested in a few investments within that bond.

The relationship between Caledonian and Options

Options' relationship with Caledonian began in early 2012. Options has confirmed there were 509 introductions to it made by Caledonian between 27 April 2012 and 20 May 2013.

Options has said that it carried out due diligence checks on Caledonian and has provided supporting evidence of the checks it made.

I have set out below a summary of what I consider to be the key events and/or actions during the relationship between Options and Caledonian, which I have observed from the available evidence (this includes evidence from Mr Y's case file and generic submissions Options has made to us about its due diligence on, and its relationship with, Caledonian).

March 2012

A business profile was completed which recorded Options' first meeting with Mr David Clark of Caledonian. This set out Caledonian's proposed business model as follows (redacted as appropriate):

"Dave Clark detailed his business model,

He was preferred adviser for the Armed Forces occupational pension scheme for individuals who had left the armed forces and were taking up positions in close security work in places such as Iraq/Afghanistan/Iran etc... and also anti piracy positions.

The profile of the clients were described as:

- 30 to 50 year olds*
- Had been in the armed forces for between 6 to 10 years*
- Had left the armed forces and wanted to transfer their pension arrangements*
- They had no expectation of long life expectancy*
- They were living today so wanted to access funds earlier then they could if their pension stayed in the armed forces pension scheme*
- They were generally still resident in UK but some were now living abroad in various countries such as Thailand, Germany, Spain etc.*
- They were now earning quite large salaries circa £70k plus*

Dave Clark was provided referrals from the armed forces pensions contact he had and also he received enquiries as a result of his clients speaking to other ex-armed forces personnel.

He had been doing large volumes of QROPS business with a provider called (business M) but recognised the fact that a UK SIPP was probably more appropriate for the majority of his clients.

He was currently putting them into an international Friends Provident Bond, the underlying investments were regulated.

Dave Clark himself was not a regulated adviser, he was a consultant to these clients and advised (my emphasis) them on their armed forces transfers only, he was a qualified accountant and was a member of the Chartered Institute of Accountants.

His company was trading as Caledonian although the holding company was a BVI company called MMG Associates.

He was developing a relationship with (Mr P), and may consider [Business C] as an alternative investment provider in due course. Although he was currently wanting a relationship with a SIPP provider.

Dave Clark was looking at volume business in the region of 50 schemes a month."

16 March 2012

Mr Clark of Caledonian signed and dated Options' "Non-Regulated Introducer Profile". The form set out its purpose as follows:

"As an FSA regulated pensions company we are required to carry out due diligence as best practice on unregulated introducer firms looking to introduce clients to us to gain some insight into the business they carry out."

On the Non-Regulated Introducer Profile, Caledonian responded to a number of questions. The key points were:

Under the section headed "Company Information" the following was recorded:

- It had branches in Chile, Peru, Columbia, Argentina, Brazil and Switzerland.
- It had been trading since 1997.

Under the section headed "Product Information", in response to the question, "what products does the firm promote/distribute" the answer noted was:

"Offshore savings plans + investment bonds – Friends Provident International +"

Caledonian set out that the products had been accepted by other SIPP providers, including Options, and they hadn't been declined by other product providers.

Under the section headed "Sales and Marketing Approach", in response to the question as to how Caledonian would obtain clients, the answer was:

"Referral"

In response to a request to describe the sales process adopted by Caledonian, it was set out:

"Referral – Visit – Analysis – Visit."

When asked to describe the average profile of the type of client Caledonian took on, the answer was:

"Income £70,000, Age 36, Self employed in the security industry."

When Caledonian was asked how much business would be sold through pension arrangements the answer given was:

“50/50 Pension Transfer/Regular Savings Plan”

In response to a question about the typical commission structure the answer was:

“7% up front from bond – 0.5% Trail.”

Under the section headed, “Training and Information”, in response to the question, “what training was provided to its agents” the answer was:

“Ongoing product training and accompanied meetings.”

In response to a question about what specific pension training was delivered to its agent the answer was:

“Visits to providers directly.”

In response to how the business by its agents was monitored, the answer was:

“Fully administrative structure – Caledonian, Careys – Compliance.”

In response to a question about the kind of service it sought from a SIPP provider, the answer was:

“Administrative & Compliance.”

Under the section headed, “Legal and Regulatory Information” the following was recorded:

- Caledonian did not work with any FSA regulated company or adviser.
- It wasn't a member of any professional or trade body.
- It had no PI cover in place at the time.
- It hadn't been subject to any (or ongoing) FSA supervisory visits or censure.

In response to a question about what measures were in place to:

“ensure the Firm engage legal advice on the activities it carries out to ensure regulated activities are not carried out?”

The following answer was given:

“Majority of business carried out in unregulated jurisdictions but where regulations apply we are licensed to carry out our activities.”

In response to the question as to how Caledonian demonstrates it treats its customers fairly it said that:

“Compliance & Procedures in current alignment with FSA TCF.”

In response to a question about what Caledonian's objectives were for the coming 12 months it was noted:

“To continue to develop a fully compliant business of PT to HM Forces”

With regards to members pension scheme business it was noted that Caledonian was seeking a “Compliant structure in a Regulated structure.”

An email was sent from Options’ compliance department to Mr Clark, requesting a copy of Caledonian’s latest company accounts and certified copy of the passport for its principals/directors.

3 April 2012

Options’ compliance department sent a chaser email to Caledonian for the documents it requested on 23 March 2012. A senior consultant at Caledonian replied on the same day and provided a copy of Mr Clark’s passport. The consultant said she would speak with Mr Clark when he returned from a trip, regarding the company accounts.

4 April 2012

David Clark says he’s been in Iraq and will send documents once he’s back

27 April 2012

Options started to receive introductions from Caledonian.

1 August 2012

An Options’ employee sent an internal email to another Options employee, who it seems was responsible for managing the relationship with Caledonian. The first employee said to the second employee that Options still required certified passports for the principals/directors and company accounts, and that ‘compliance’ would raise it in the audit that was being completed on that day.

The second employee confirmed on the same day that they had spoken with Mr Clark. It was noted that Mr Clark had said the company secretary was on holiday, but he would send an urgent request for the outstanding documentation.

4 September 2012

A “Non-regulated Introducer Agreement Terms of Business” document between Options and “MMG Associates Ltd T/A Caledonian International Associates” was signed and dated by Mr Clark. That agreement included:

“The Business Introducer undertakes that they will not provide advice as defined by the Act in relation to the SIPP – for the avoidance of doubt this includes reference to advice on the selection of The SIPP Operator, contributions, transfer of benefits, taking benefits and HMRC rules.”

Options has said that these terms of business were actually received by Caledonian on 21 March 2012.

1 November 2012

Options conducted a ‘World Check’ (a risk intelligence tool which allows subscribers to conduct background checks on businesses and individuals) on two Caledonian employees - Mr [C] and Mr David Clark. This check did not reveal any issues.

Undated document likely to have been created in March 2013

Options has provided an undated document called the “Overseas Introducer Assessment

Proforma". The document listed several criteria and assessed its internal measurement criteria as 'low risk', 'medium risk' or 'high risk' with supporting notes.

This document isn't dated but the earliest this is likely to have been completed is around March 2013 when Options appears to have been looking more closely at its compliance requirements for Caledonian, having also received some recent business that didn't fit the armed forces profile.

I have set out below what the sections of this document recorded and the level of risk that was noted:

- Google Search and FCA

This section was assessed as 'low risk'. The notes set out that there were no adverse comments.

- Regulatory

This section was assessed as 'high risk'. The notes said that: "Cannot find any regulatory information from the details held."

- Company

This section had a mixture of assessments which were mainly medium risk. It was set out that Caledonian had:

"No UK branch. Cannot see any EEA regulatory details." And this was classed as 'high risk'.

Caledonian's trading history was recorded as 'medium risk'. The notes set out that: "Unknown company establishment time – cannot find any details from information received." It was also noted in relation to Caledonian's accounts that:

"No accounts requested ?."

- Articles of Association

It was noted that this was 'medium risk' and that: "No articles of association requested/received"

- Advice

This section was assessed as 'high risk' and it was noted:

"Unregulated – No details of how advice given. No regulatory bodies / permissions seen. Although suggested on email that advice given in Jordan?"

And:

"Advice possibly given in Jordan, although not sure if true for UK based clients".

- Transfer / Switches.

This section was assessed as 'high risk' and in particular it was noted that the funds for investment within the SIPP were to be generated from:

“Transfers from Armed Forces Pension occupational scheme.”

- Client Profile

This section was assessed as ‘high risk’. The notes set out:

“Client Profile: 30-50 years old. Part of armed forced 6-10 years. Generally still UK residents, some abroad. Now working in security earning £70k pa. HOWEVER, recently received business outside of profile.”

- Acceptance – Result 1

This section was assessed as ‘medium risk’. The notes don’t explain the reason for this. However, the measurement criteria explanation under medium risk set out that:

“company details are a mixture of green and amber raise with technical review committee before proceeding.”

- Acceptance – Result 2

This section was assessed as a mixture of ‘high risk’ and ‘medium risk’. It is set out under the high-risk section that if the section was a mixture of ‘red’ and ‘amber’ this section should be declined.

‘Professional Qualification’ was recorded as ‘high risk’. The notes recorded:

“No qualifications documented other than meeting notes from March 2012 where David Clark stated he was a qualified accountant and member of Chartered Institute of Accountants.”

‘Meeting’ was recorded as ‘medium risk’. The notes recorded: “Meeting held at Carey Pensions UK office March 2012.”

7 March 2013

An internal email was sent by an Options’ manager to other Options employees summarising a call Options’ had held with Caledonian (David Clark). The summary said:

- Options had noted that following recent FSA (now FCA) review and guidance all SIPP operators were being asked to look at the business received from their introducers against their expectations surrounding the type of profile.
- Options’ understanding was that the introductions from Caledonian would be ex-military, aged approximately 36 years old and who were self-employed in the security industry with earnings of approximately £70,000. However, out of the seven new business cases that they reviewed on 6 March 2013, three of them had moved away from the expected profile.
- Options had asked Caledonian if its profile was changing/extending. Caledonian explained:

predominantly the members were in the close protection industry which as @ 5 years ago they all went into. He said that foreign operatives were now coming in in a more organised structure. Some were getting promoted into senior positions. Many were previously divers in the military and so going into Diving elsewhere.

- Options had asked Caledonian to put together a note to update its file as to the business it would receive.

20 March 2013

Options sent Caledonian an email. Options noted that it was waiting for Caledonian to provide an update to the changes in its profile. Options also noted it had received further business that day which was against the expected profile. One was a taxi driver with earnings of £15,000 and the other was a tutor with earnings of £23,000.

26 April 2013

An Options employee in its compliance department sent an email to several Options employees. She raised concerns about Caledonian's business practices. She said:

"We have a responsibility to proactively monitor our distribution channels to ensure our products do not end up with customers for whom it is not suitable. Based on recent correspondence with Caledonian I am increasingly concerned by their business practices and therefore believe we should review our relationship with them and the business they have introduced. I will arrange a meeting for next week to discuss. In the meantime we need to determine the answers to the questions below to help facilitate our discussions."

The employee asked in April 2013 for answers to several questions, the responses to which I have set out below.

Options sent Caledonian an email requesting further information. The email confirmed Options were reviewing the terms of business in light of recent announcements from the FCA.

Options said it was keen to continue to do business with Caledonian but it must be within the regulatory framework and that it must satisfy "the regulators should they come in and review this area of our business, so we must start with ensuring we understand each stage of the process, to enable us to develop a robust and compliant process for this business moving forward." Options asked Caledonian a number of questions, which I have set out below.

1. Can you provide your organisational structure and the jurisdiction in which each is registered and the regulation/regulator that each company operates within. If you are relying on any exemptions please state which exemptions and the reasons you believe you can operate within those exemptions
2. Are you giving advice and if so in what capacity and under what regulatory environment are you providing this advice.
3. What offices do you have and where, do the jurisdictions in which you have offices have a regulatory regime, if so can you provide details of the regulators in those jurisdictions.
4. On what basis are you providing illustrations and the reasons for this basis
5. Do you meet all your clients in Jordan, if not why do your Non Solicitation forms signed by yourself confirm the advice was given in Jordan
6. Please confirm the profile of your clients
7. Please confirm how you receive introductions to your clients
8. Can you update information about your team their background, expertise in dealing with pensions
9. On the Non Solicitation letters you note that Caledonian does not have a permanent place of business in the UK. However, you request correspondence to be sent to The Pensions Service Centre, Please can you clarify Caledonian's presence in the UK and the nature of the office in

Options said that from 1 May 2013 it had implemented changes to its requirements, and Caledonian must have a "UK FCA regulated adviser providing the TVAS and the sign off for the suitability of transfers from occupational schemes of any values."

15 May 2013

Options sent an internal email which was a summary of a telephone conversation with Mr P of Business C. The summary recorded that:

- Mr P confirmed that an FCA Regulated Adviser would be providing the TVAS reports on all Caledonian introduced clients. This adviser would be placed in their Milton Keynes office for a period of time and would produce TVAS reports on the back book of business with Caledonian.
- On this understanding Options had agreed they would continue to process applications where the TVAS report was currently being issued by Mr P.

20 May 2013

Options says this was the date of the last introduction made to it by Caledonian.

23 May 2013

A handwritten summary was made of a meeting between Caledonian (Mr P and Mr David Clark) and Options. This included the following.

- Mr Clark said he was a consultant to armed forces and not an adviser in the FCA sense.
- The [...] address was a postal address and not a working office.
- Mr Clark said he meets with clients in the UK. It was noted that the profile document said that he met them in Jordan. So, a letter was needed about where advice was given.
- The initial contact was abroad. The client contacts Caledonian if they want to transfer their pension.
- Caledonian's website didn't mention that it would give advice. And their documents made it clear that no advice was given and that clients should take advice from a regulated adviser.
- Caledonian explained that the reason for lots of transfers was because of the market and their relationship with the providers.
- The proposal going forward involved an appointed representative of a Manchester IFA being a pension specialist and it had the necessary qualifications. Going forward the Manchester IFA would deal with business.
- Options agreed to allow Caledonian a four-week window to put measures in force.
- The question about providing Options with a letter if advice was being given was irrelevant as Caledonian didn't provide any advice.
- Caledonian said its illustrations were provided to facilitate the transfer of the pensions. Options query was whether this was advice.
- There also appears to be an internal note which said it should be established if there was a Caledonian terms of business.

I have not seen evidence that any of the agreed actions were completed.

May 2013

Options decided to review its relationship with Caledonian. Options has provided a copy of its document headed, "Caledonian Relationship Review 2013". I have reviewed the document in full, but have only quoted below what I consider to be the key part:

"... Following a detailed review of the process and documentation concerns were raised regarding whether the clients [of Caledonian] could be deemed to be receiving advice through an unregulated entity.

Following a request for further clarification on these points we have not been able to satisfy ourselves that this is not the case.

We have insisted that they move to a model that all cases are fully advised by an FCA regulated firm/individual, which has been accepted ...

Following a meeting in the Milton Keynes office ... where [Mr C] from Caledonian, and [Mr P] of [Business C] explained their current process and documentation and described their future process, [and] further discussions ... it was decided that they had not satisfied us enough with their current processes for us to continue to allow taking on new business in the interim without the use of a UK regulated firm or individual who was suitably qualified.

[Options] has instructed the team of this decision so from week beginning 28th May any new business received will be rejected unless it comes through an FCA regulated firm."

It set out a detailed process by which Caledonian proposed to move to a model where all clients would be fully advised by an FCA regulated firm/individual, and it highlighted the benefits of this new approach as being:

"All schemes are coming in on an advised basis

Brings the process and clients into the UK regulated process

Brings the clients into the FSCS and FOS protections

Ensures all occupational schemes undergo analysis and advice"

I have not seen evidence that this advised or regulated process described ever came into effect for any applications made by Caledonian.

Mr Y's dealing with Options and Caledonian

I've set out above the background to how Mr Y came to deal with Caledonian, so I won't repeat that again.

Mr Y has said that a representative of Caledonian (Mr A) first approached him whilst he was working abroad. He was told that Caledonian could make him money and beat his military pension. He says he thought he was getting independent specialist advice from someone who would proactively look after his pension and get the best returns possible. He had thought that Caledonian were regulated to provide the advice they gave and that they were an above-board global armed forces pensions specialist.

Mr Y says he was told that his armed forces pension would only likely grow by 1.5% a year whereas if he put the money in a SIPP it would earn 8% a year. He says that he was told he could retire earlier on more money and that the returns would be better. So, he agreed to make the transfer.

I'll refer below to the correspondence that Mr Y signed, although he says this was all pre-completed. As he thought he was getting sound professional advice, he just signed everything. He says he didn't understand what 'execution only' meant. Mr Y says he didn't choose Options or the investments he was ultimately put in. This was all done by Caledonian.

Having recently left the armed forces, Mr Y says he had no investment experience or financial knowledge. He just trusted Caledonian as he had no reason not to. Mr Y was single at the time and had never married. He says that he had no life insurance cover and only a small amount of savings. He says investment risk levels and his financial objectives were never discussed with him at the time.

26 November 2012 - Mr Y completed Options' SIPP application form. In brief this confirmed his age, permanent address in the UK, employment status, details of his armed forces pension and the intended investment.

The front page of the SIPP application stated the following:

*"The Carey Pension Scheme Application Form For Direct Clients.
(SIPP to be established on execution only).*

This Form should be used if you are a client establishing a SIPP without advice. You have made this decision independently and are aware of the implications of this decision

Please read the Key Features Document, Terms & Conditions and Fee Schedules prior to completing this application form...

Carey Pensions UK LLP, and Carey Pensions Trustees UK Ltd have not provided any advice and are not responsible for the suitability or appropriateness of your decision to establish a SIPP"

Page 4 under the section headed Transfers it said that:

"Please Note, whilst we cannot give advice, we recommend that in these circumstances you seek appropriate advice"

Page 5 under the section headed Investments it said that:

"As you do not have a Financial Adviser, your investment choices are your sole responsibility. You will instruct us and we will act on those instructions as long as it is an accepted investment in the Carey Pension Scheme."

*Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd will not at any time review any aspects of your appointed Investment Manager's financial status or investment and risk strategies nor have any involvement in your investment choices and selection, nor give advice on the suitability of your investment choices. We would always recommend independent advice be obtained from a suitably qualified adviser....

You are responsible for the ongoing review and monitoring of the investments you have chosen - and remember - all investments can go down in value as well as up. Carey Pensions is not responsible for any investment choices or decisions."

Page 9 under the section headed Declaration (which was signed and dated by Mr Y on 26 November 2012) it said that:

"I hereby apply for membership as a direct client of the Carey Pension Scheme

I acknowledge and accept the Terms & Conditions of the Carey Pension Scheme and agree to be bound by the Scheme Rules of the Carey Pension Scheme.

I confirm that I have read and understand the relevant Key Features Documents, Terms & Conditions and all aspects of the application form.

I confirm that all details provided are true and complete to the best of my knowledge and belief.

I hereby consent to Carey Pensions UK LLP requesting the transfer of my policies listed in the application form.

I confirm that I will instruct Carey Pensions UK LLP to make the investments as detailed in the application form.

I understand that it is my sole responsibility to make decisions relating to the purchase, retention or sale of any investment held within the Carey Pension Scheme.

I understand that Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd are not in any way able to provide me with any advice.

I confirm that I am establishing the Carey Pension Scheme on an execution only basis.

I confirm that I understand that the value of my pension scheme can go down as well as up depending on the performance of the investments chosen."

26 November 2012 – Mr Y also signed and dated Options' member declaration form.

This confirmed the following:

I the above named write to instruct Carey Pensions UK LLP to establish a Self Invested Personal Pension (SIPP) and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd to proceed with the transfer of Occupational Pension Scheme benefits from The Armed Forces Pension to the Carey Pension Scheme.

I confirm that I have received full and appropriate advice from Caledonian International and following this advice I wish to proceed with the transfer. [my emphasis]

I am fully aware and understand that by giving an instruction to proceed with the transfer of my Occupational Scheme Benefits to the Carey Pension Scheme I may lose substantial benefits.

However, being of sound mind and in full possession of the facts I have considered the matter of the transfer and as an individual confirm my decision and instruction to both Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd to proceed with the transfer of the Occupational Scheme Benefits.

I am fully aware that in acting on my instructions both Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd act on an Execution Only Basis.

Neither Carey Pensions UK LLP nor Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd have provided any advice whatsoever in respect of this transaction.

Should any tax charges be deemed by HMRC to apply in future these will be paid directly from the fund or by me as the member of the Scheme.

I do not hold Carey Pensions UK LLP or Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd responsible for any fluctuations in value of either of the Occupational Pension Scheme or the Carey Pension Scheme.

I agree to provide Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd with any further information and/or documentation they may require prior to completing this transaction.

I fully indemnify both Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees Ltd at all times against any and all liability arising from this transaction.

26 November 2012 – Mr Y also signed the instruction for the transfer of his pension from his ceding scheme. He also signed the letter of authority for Options to provide Caledonian with information about his scheme.

14 December 2012 – Caledonian sent to Options all the application paperwork for Mr Y's SIPP.

Included in the paperwork sent to Options was a Certificate of Non-Solicitation signed and dated by Mr Clark of Caledonian. This document which was addressed to Friends Provident International and was on Caledonian headed paper confirmed that:

We have today submitted an application for a policy on behalf of the above named client, where the life assured is also resident in the UK. Since the life assured's address is / the client has signed the proposal form in the United Kingdom we understand that under the Rules of the Financial Services Authority you must treat the application as business regulated by the Financial Services and Markets Act.

Accordingly you will send post-sale information and notice of the right to cancel the contract to the client following issue of the policy.

The company is not authorised to conduct investment business in the United Kingdom. We acknowledge that this means that you are only able to accept the introduction from us if we have not been carrying on investment business in the United Kingdom.

We therefore certify that:

- (i) We do not have a permanent place of business in the United Kingdom; and*
- (ii) We did not approach the above named client.*
- (iii) The advice was given in Jordan.*
- (iv) The client approached us directly and requested us to give him advice.*

22 February 2013 – Options sent an email to Mr Y confirming that it had received the £25,499.91 transfer from his Armed Forces pension and had now completed the FPI application form on his instruction.

25 February 2013 – FPI opened the bond and £24,216.01 was invested.

19 March 2013 – an adviser fee of £250 was paid to Caledonian from Mr Y's Options SIPP.

17 July 2014 – Financial Provision Solutions Limited (FPS) were instructed by Options to complete a TVAS report.

3 December 2015 – Mr Y wrote to Options to raise a complaint about its role in accepting his pension transfer and facilitating the investments through FPI.

5 February 2016 – Options sent a final response letter to Mr Y not upholding his complaint.

What I've decided – and why

I've considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what's fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

Having considered everything carefully, I've come to the same conclusion as our investigator and for substantially similar reasons. I'll explain why below.

In considering what is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of this complaint, I have taken into account relevant law and regulations; regulator's rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time.

The Principles

The FCA's Principles for Businesses are of particular relevance to my decision. The Principles for Businesses, which are set out in the FCA's handbook "are a general statement of the fundamental obligations of firms under the regulatory system" (PRIN 1.1.2G). And, I consider that the Principles relevant to this complaint include Principles 2, 3 and 6 which say:

"Principle 2 – Skill, care and diligence – A firm must conduct its business with due skill, care and diligence.

Principle 3 – Management and control – A firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems.

Principle 6 – Customers' interests – A firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly."

Regulatory publications

The FCA (and its predecessor, the FSA) has issued a number of publications which remind SIPP operators of their obligations and set out how they might achieve the outcomes envisaged by the Principles:

- The 2009 and 2012 thematic review reports.
- The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance.
- The July 2014 "Dear CEO" letter.

I have set out below what I consider to be the key parts of the publications.

The 2009 Thematic Review Report

The 2009 report included the following statement:

“We are very clear that SIPP operators, regardless of whether they provide advice, are bound by Principle 6 of the Principles for Businesses (‘a firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly’) insofar as they are obliged to ensure the fair treatment of their customers. COBS 3.2.3(2) states that a member of a pension scheme is a ‘client’ for COBS purposes, and ‘Customer’ in terms of Principle 6 includes clients.

It is the responsibility of SIPP operators to continuously analyse the individual risks to themselves and their clients, with reference to the six TCF consumer outcomes.

We agree that firms acting purely as SIPP operators are not responsible for the SIPP advice given by third parties such as IFAs. However, we are also clear that SIPP operators cannot absolve themselves of any responsibility, and we would expect them to have procedures and controls, and to be gathering and analysing management information, enabling them to identify possible instances of financial crime and consumer detriment such as unsuitable SIPPs. Such instances could then be addressed in an appropriate way, for example by contacting the member to confirm the position, or by contacting the firm giving advice and asking for clarification. Moreover, while they are not responsible for the advice, there is a reputational risk to SIPP operators that facilitate the SIPPs that are unsuitable or detrimental to clients.

Of particular concern were firms whose systems and controls were weak and inadequate to the extent that they had not identified obvious potential instances of poor advice and/or potential financial crime. Depending on the facts and circumstances of individual cases, we may take enforcement action against SIPP operators who do not safeguard their clients’ interests in this respect, with reference to Principle 3 of the Principles for Businesses (‘a firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems’).

The following are examples of measures that SIPP operators could consider, taken from examples of good practice that we observed and suggestions we have made to firms:

- Confirming, both initially and on an ongoing basis, that intermediaries that advise clients are authorised and regulated by the FSA, that they have the appropriate permissions to give the advice they are providing to the firm’s clients, and that they do not appear on the FSA website listing warning notices.*
- Having Terms of Business agreements governing relationships, and clarifying respective responsibilities, with intermediaries introducing SIPP business.*
- Routinely recording and reviewing the type (i.e. the nature of the SIPP investment) and size of investments recommended by intermediaries that give advice and introduce clients to the firm, so that potentially unsuitable SIPPs can be identified.*
- Being able to identify anomalous investments, e.g. unusually small or large transactions or more ‘esoteric’ investments such as unquoted shares, together with the intermediary that introduced the business. This would enable the firm to seek appropriate clarification, e.g. from the client or their adviser, if it is concerned about the suitability of what was recommended.*
- Requesting copies of the suitability reports provided to clients by the intermediary giving advice. While SIPP operators are not responsible for advice, having this* information would enhance the firm's understanding of its clients, making the facilitation of unsuitable SIPPs less likely.

- Routinely identifying instances of execution-only clients who have signed disclaimers taking responsibility for their investment decisions, and gathering and analysing data regarding the aggregate volume of such business.
- Identifying instances of clients waiving their cancellation rights, and the reasons for this."

The later publications

In the October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance, the FCA states:

"This guide, originally published in September 2009, has been updated to give firms further guidance to help meet the regulatory requirements. These are not new or amended requirements, but a reminder of regulatory responsibilities that became a requirement in April 2007.

All firms, regardless of whether they do or do not provide advice must meet Principle 6 and treat customers fairly. COBS 3.2.3(2) is clear that a member of a pension scheme is a "client" for SIPP operators and so is a customer under Principle 6. It is a SIPP operator's responsibility to assess its business with reference to our six TCF consumer outcomes." The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance also set out the following:

"Relationships between firms that advise and introduce prospective members and SIPP operators

Examples of good practice we observed during our work with SIPP operators include the following:

- Confirming, both initially and on an ongoing basis, that: introducers that advise clients are authorised and regulated by the FCA; that they have the appropriate permissions to give the advice they are providing; neither the firm, nor its approved persons are on the list of prohibited individuals or cancelled firms and have a clear disciplinary history; and that the firm does not appear on the FCA website listings for un-authorised business warnings.
- Having terms of business agreements that govern relationships and clarify the responsibilities of those introducers providing SIPP business to a firm.
- Understanding the nature of the introducers' work to establish the nature of the firm, what their business objectives are, the types of clients they deal with, the levels of business they conduct and expect to introduce, the types of investments they recommend and whether they use other SIPP operators. Being satisfied that they are appropriate to deal with.
- Being able to identify irregular investments, often indicated by unusually small or large transactions; or higher risk investments such as unquoted shares which may be illiquid. This would enable the firm to seek appropriate clarification, for example from the prospective member or their adviser, if it has any concerns.
- Identifying instances when prospective members waive their cancellation rights and the reasons for this.

Although the members' advisers are responsible for the SIPP investment advice given, as a SIPP operator the firm has a responsibility for the quality of the SIPP business it administers. Examples of good practice we have identified include:

- conducting independent verification checks on members to ensure the information they are being supplied with, or that they are providing the firm with, is authentic and meets the firm's procedures and are not being used to launder money*
- having clear terms of business agreements in place which govern relationships and clarify responsibilities for relationships with other professional bodies such as solicitors and accountants, and*
- using non-regulated introducer checklists which demonstrate the SIPP operators have considered the additional risks involved in accepting business from non-regulated introducers*

In relation to due diligence the October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance said:

"Due diligence

Principle 2 of the FCA's Principles for Businesses requires all firms to conduct their business with due skill, care and diligence. All firms should ensure that they conduct and retain appropriate and sufficient due diligence (for example, checking and monitoring introducers as well as assessing that investments are appropriate for personal pension schemes) to help them justify their business decisions. In doing this SIPP operators should consider:

- ensuring that all investments permitted by the scheme are permitted by HMRC, or where a tax charge is incurred, that charge is identifiable, HMRC is informed and the tax charge paid*
- periodically reviewing the due diligence the firm undertakes in respect of the introducers that use their scheme and, where appropriate enhancing the processes that are in place in order to identify and mitigate any risks to the members and the scheme*
- having checks which may include, but are not limited to:*
 - ensuring that introducers have the appropriate permissions, qualifications and skills to introduce different types of business to the firm, and*
 - undertaking additional checks such as viewing Companies House records, identifying connected parties and visiting introducers*
- ensuring all third-party due diligence that the firm uses or relies on has been independently produced and verified*
- good practices we have identified in firms include having a set of benchmarks, or minimum standards, with the purpose of setting the minimum standard the firm is prepared to accept to either deal with introducers or accept investments, and*
- ensuring these benchmarks clearly identify those instances that would lead a firm to decline the proposed business, or to undertake further investigations such as instances of potential pension liberation, investments that may breach*

HMRC tax-relievable investments and non-standard investments that have not been approved by the firm

The July 2014 “Dear CEO” letter provides a further reminder that the Principles apply and an indication of the FCA’s expectations about the kinds of practical steps a SIPP operator might reasonably take to achieve the outcomes envisaged by the Principles.

The “Dear CEO” letter also sets out how a SIPP operator might meet its obligations in relation to investment due diligence. It says those obligations could be met by:

- Correctly establishing and understanding the nature of an investment
- Ensuring that an investment is genuine and not a scam, or linked to fraudulent activity, money-laundering or pensions liberation
- Ensuring that an investment is safe/secure (meaning that custody of assets is through a reputable arrangement, and any contractual agreements are correctly drawn-up and legally enforceable)
- Ensuring that an investment can be independently valued, both at point of purchase and subsequently
- Ensuring that an investment is not impaired (for example that previous investors have received income if expected, or that any investment providers are credit worthy etc)

I acknowledge that the 2009 report (and the 2012 report and the “Dear CEO” letter) are not formal guidance (whereas the 2013 finalised guidance is). However, I don’t think the fact that the reports and “Dear CEO” letter didn’t constitute formal (i.e. statutory) guidance means their importance or relevance should be underestimated.

The publications provide a reminder that the Principles for Businesses apply and are an indication of the kinds of things a SIPP operator might do to ensure it is treating its customers fairly and to produce the outcomes envisaged by the Principles. In that respect, these publications also go some way to indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice at the relevant time. I’m therefore satisfied it’s appropriate to take them into account.

I don’t think the fact that the later publications (i.e. those other than the 2009 and 2012 Thematic Review Reports), post-date the events that are the subject of this complaint mean that the examples of good industry practice they provide were not good practice at the time of the relevant events. It is clear from the text of the 2009 and 2012 reports, (and the “Dear CEO” letter published in 2014), that the regulator expected SIPP operators to have incorporated the recommended good industry practices into the conduct of their business already. So, whilst the regulators’ comments suggest some industry participants’ understanding of how the standards shaped what was expected of SIPP operators changed over time, it is clear the standards themselves had not changed.

The later publications were published after the events complained about, but the Principles that underpin them existed throughout, as did the obligation to act in accordance with those Principles. I am required to take into account good industry practice at the relevant time. And, as mentioned, the publications indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice at the relevant time.

That doesn’t mean that in considering what is fair and reasonable, I will only consider Options’ actions with these documents in mind. The reports, Dear CEO letter and guidance gave non-exhaustive examples of good industry practice. They did not say the suggestions given were the limit of what a SIPP operator should do. As the annex to the “Dear CEO” letter notes, what should be done to meet regulatory obligations will depend on the circumstances.

To be clear, I do not say the Principles or the publications obliged Options to ensure the pension transfer was suitable for Mr Y. It is accepted Options was not required to give advice to Mr Y, and could not give advice. And I accept the publications don’t alter the meaning of, or the scope of, the Principles. But they are evidence of what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time, which would bring about the outcomes envisaged by the Principles.

I would also add, that even if I took the view that any publications or guidance that post-dated the events complained of don’t help to clarify the type of good industry practice that existed at the relevant time (which I don’t), that doesn’t alter my view on what I consider to have been good industry practice at the time. That’s because I find that the 2009 and 2012 reports together with the Principles provide a very clear indication of what Options could and should have done to comply with its regulatory obligations that existed at the relevant time before accepting any introduction from Caledonian, setting up the SIPP and facilitating the pension transfer into the SIPP.

Ultimately, in determining this complaint, I need to consider whether Options complied with its regulatory obligations as set out by the Principles to act with due skill, care and diligence, to take reasonable care to organise its business affairs responsibly and effectively, to pay due regards to the interests of its customers, to treat them fairly, and to act honestly, fairly and professionally. And, in doing that, I’m looking to the Principles and the publications listed above to provide an indication of what Options could’ve done to comply with its regulatory obligations.

COBS2.1.1R

I’ve taken account of the judgment of the High Court in the case of Adams v Options SIPP [2020] EWHC 1229 (Ch) and the Court of Appeal judgment in Adams v Options UK Personal Pensions LLP [2021] EWCA Civ 474.

I’m of the view that neither of the judgments say anything about how the Principles apply to an ombudsman’s consideration of a complaint. But, to be clear, I don’t say this means Adams isn’t a relevant consideration at all. As noted above, I have taken account of both judgments when making this decision on Mr Y’s case.

I acknowledge that COBS2.1.1R (A firm must act honestly, fairly and professionally in accordance with the best interests of its client) overlaps with certain of the Principles and that this rule was considered by HHJ Dight in the High Court case. Mr Adams pleaded that Options SIPP owed him a duty to comply with COBS 2.1.1R, a breach of which, he argued, was actionable pursuant to section 138(D) of The Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA) (“the COBS claim”). HHJ Dight rejected this claim and found that Options SIPP had complied with the best interests rule on the facts of Mr Adams’ case.

Although the Court of Appeal ultimately overturned HHJ Dight’s judgment, it rejected that part of Mr Adams’ appeal that related to HHJ Dight’s dismissal of the COBS claim on the basis that Mr Adams was seeking to advance a case that was radically different to that found in his initial pleadings. The Court found that this part of Mr Adams’ appeal did not so much represent a challenge to the grounds on which HHJ Dight had dismissed the COBS claim, but rather was an attempt to put forward an entirely new case.

I note that, in Adams v Options, HHJ Dight found that the factual context of a case would inform the extent of the duty imposed by COBS 2.1.1R. HHJ Dight said at para 148:

“In my judgment in order to identify the extent of the duty imposed by Rule 2.1.1 one has to identify the relevant factual context, because it is apparent from the submissions of each of the parties that the context has an impact on the ascertainment of the extent of the duty. The key fact, perhaps composite fact, in the context is the agreement into which the parties entered, which defined their roles and functions in the transaction.”

However, the facts in Mr Y’s case are very different from those in Mr Adams’ cases. There are also significant differences between the breaches of COBS 2.1.1R alleged by Mr Adams and from the issues in Mr Y’s complaint. The breaches were summarised in paragraph 120 of the Court of Appeal judgment. In particular, HHJ Dight considered the contractual relationship between the parties in the context of Mr Adams’ pleaded breaches of COBS 2.1.1R that happened after the contract was entered into. In Mr Y’s complaint, I am considering whether Options ought to have identified that the introductions from Caledonian involved a risk of consumer detriment and, if so, whether it ought to have ceased accepting introductions from Caledonian prior to entering into a contract with Mr Y.

I think it is also important to emphasise that I must determine this complaint by reference to what is, in my opinion, fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case. And, in doing that, I am required to take into account relevant considerations which include: law and regulations; regulator’s rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time. This is a clear and relevant point of difference between this complaint and the judgments in Adams v Options SIPP. That was a legal claim which was defined by the formal pleadings in Mr Adams’ statement of case.

To be clear, I have proceeded on the understanding Options was not obliged – and not able – to give advice to Mr Y on the suitability of its SIPP, the pension transfer or the subsequent investments made for him personally. But I am satisfied Options’ obligations included deciding whether to accept particular investments into its SIPP and/or whether to accept introductions of business from particular businesses.

I note for completeness that Options wasn’t granted permission to appeal the Court of Appeal judgment to the Supreme Court.

what did Options obligations mean in practice?

In this case, the business Options was conducting was its operation of SIPPs. I am satisfied that meeting its regulatory obligations when conducting this business would include deciding whether to accept or reject particular investments and/or referrals of business.

The regulatory publications provided some examples of good industry practice observed by the FSA and FCA during their work with SIPP operators including being satisfied that a particular introducer is appropriate to deal with and a particular investment is an appropriate one for a SIPP.

I’m satisfied that, to meet its regulatory obligations, when conducting its business, Options was required to consider whether to accept or reject particular referrals of business, with the Principles in mind.

the due diligence carried out by Options on Caledonian and what it should have concluded

I have considered what a level of due diligence consistent with Options' regulatory obligations and the standards of good practice at the time ought to have revealed. And what, with those same obligations and standards in mind, Options ought to have concluded about Caledonian. And, when doing this, I have taken into account the evidence I have mentioned above.

As set out above, the 2009 Thematic Review Report deals specifically with the relationships between SIPP operators and introducers or "intermediaries". And it gives non-exhaustive examples of good practice. In my view, to meet these standards, and its regulatory obligations, set by the Principles, Options ought to have identified a significant risk of consumer detriment arising from business brought about by a business introducing consumers to Options which appeared to be specialising in pension transfers from one occupational pension scheme purporting to be on an execution only (that is, non-advised) basis. And so Options ought to have ensured it thought very carefully about accepting applications from Caledonian and, therefore, Mr Y.

I think it is fair and reasonable to say such consideration should have involved Options getting a full understanding of the business model of the introducer, the nature of the investments to be made and putting a clear agreement in place between it and the introducer and ensuring careful thought was given to the risk generally posed to consumers by the introducer.

Options did gain some information about Caledonian, as I have detailed earlier in this decision. In my view, if Options had carried out adequate due diligence on Caledonian, and drawn reasonable conclusions from this, it ought to have been aware of several points of concern and to have concluded it should not accept this business from it in respect of Mr Y.

It's clear that Options understood and accepted that it had a responsibility to carry out due diligence on Caledonian – something that we've seen on other complaints that have been brought to us and is confirmed on its statement in the Non-Regulated Introducer Profile form of 16 March 2012 that I've referred to above.

I acknowledge Options did take some steps – initially and on an ongoing basis – which it could be argued did amount to good practice consistent with its regulatory obligations.

But I think, with its regulatory obligations and good industry practice in mind, Options ought to have done more at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian and didn't, in any event, draw fair and reasonable conclusions from the information available to it by the time of Mr Y's application. Had Options done more at the outset and/or drawn fair and reasonable conclusions from what it knew, it ought in my view to have concluded that it shouldn't accept Mr Y's application from Caledonian.

I've set out my reasons for this in more detail below.

Should Options have been aware that Caledonian was providing advice to Mr Y?

In my view, acting fairly and reasonably, including a reasonable level of investigation and due diligence on Caledonian's operation, and based on the information available to it, Options ought to have concluded at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian and certainly before the conclusion of Mr Y's application, that Caledonian was providing advice as to the benefits of transferring his pension to the SIPP.

At the very least there was information that should have caused it to suspect that advice was being given and it should've carried out further investigation into that. If it had done so, I believe it likely that it would have discovered that Mr Y had been advised by Caledonian to transfer his pension.

Taking account of the available evidence, I consider that Caledonian did provide advice to Mr Y as to the benefits of transferring his pension, selecting the SIPP to do so and the investment in the FPI bond to follow. As set out earlier, the evidence is that Caledonian proactively contacted Mr Y to suggest that he consider transferring his occupational pension. Representatives of Caledonian appear to have been actively targeting Mr Y and his colleagues whilst they were working abroad.

The representatives promised a greater return on Mr Y's pension than he would obtain if he were to stick with the armed forces scheme. I consider Mr Y's testimony to be credible. There would have been no other reason for Mr Y to consider a transfer to the Carey SIPP, the FPI investment or anything else connected with this transaction had he not received advice from Caledonian to do so.

I consider it to be highly unlikely that Mr Y came to his own conclusion to make this transfer and the subsequent investment. Mr Y wasn't financially knowledgeable. And entering into an execution only relationship with Options would only have happened if he'd been advised to do so.

Options argue that it treated Caledonian as a business which was not giving advice. It has submitted that, as far as it was aware, it was receiving introductions from Caledonian on an execution only (non advised) basis.

Options' terms of business with Caledonian was signed in September 2012; however, Options says this was provided to Caledonian in March 2012. I note the terms made it clear that no advice would be given by Caledonian:

"The Business Introducer undertakes that they will not provide advice as defined by the Act in relation to the SIPP – for the avoidance of doubt this includes reference to advice on the selection of The SIPP Operator, contributions, transfer of benefits, taking benefits and HMRC rules:"

I also note on the SIPP application form which was signed and dated by Mr Y it was stated that:

"This Form should be used if you are a client establishing a SIPP without advice. You have made this decision independently and are aware of the implications of this decision".

And:

"As you do not have a Financial Adviser, your investment choices are your sole responsibility. You will instruct us and we will act on those instructions as long as it is an accepted investment in the Carey Pension Scheme."

However, there is a significant degree of inconsistency between these documents and other documentary evidence.

As highlighted above, in Mr Y's Options member's declaration dated 26 November 2012, it was confirmed that:

"I confirm that I have received full and appropriate advice from Caledonian International and following this advice I wish to proceed with the transfer.”

The members declaration is in clear conflict with the SIPP application form. As a minimum, these contradictions should have alerted Options to the possibility that Mr Y may very well have been given advice – and therefore further steps to clarify this were required. I know that Options considers this to be a simple clerical error. But I think that the fact that there are conflicting statements in the documentation just lends to the assertion that Options’ attention to detail was lacking in so far as what was happening between its clients and Caledonian went.

If Options had undertaken a reasonable level of due diligence it should have been aware that there was a significant risk that advice had been given to Mr Y to transfer his pension by Caledonian. Similarly, the available evidence also shows that Options should have concluded at the start of its relationship with Caledonian that it may be providing advice as to the benefits of transferring pensions.

In addition, in the certificate of non-solicitation document signed and dated by Caledonian on 14 December 2012, it was recorded that:

“We therefore certify that:

We do not have a permanent place of business in the United Kingdom; and We did not approach the above named client.

The advice was given in Jordan.

The client approached us directly and requested to give him advice.” (my emphasis)

This clearly creates, at the very least, the impression that Mr Y had received financial advice. Options was privy to the information contained in the investment application and non-solicitation document – and clearly this should have given it cause for concern as to whether advice was being provided by Caledonian.

I would also comment that it is unusual for individuals such as Mr Y, with no particular financial understanding or background, to want to carry out what is quite a complex transfer of occupational pension scheme benefits without receiving advice or a recommendation. Given all the evidence, I believe Options should have been aware that there was significant risk that advice was being provided by an unregulated business.

Had Options sought clarification from Mr Y, which would have been a reasonable course of action in the circumstances, I think it would likely have been made aware he was receiving advice from Caledonian. Alternatively Options could have simply declined to proceed with the application – given the obvious conflict (discussed above) about the provision of advice.

So I think Options ought reasonably to have been aware advice was being given to Mr Y by Caledonian.

I also think it was reasonably clear from the outset of Options’ relationship with Caledonian that Caledonian’s business model meant there was a risk that advice would be given on the merits of transferring out of the armed forces scheme to an Options’ SIPP and on the investments to be made within that SIPP.

In March 2012, Mr Clark described Caledonian’s business model to Options. It was recorded:

“He was (sic) preferred adviser (my emphasis) for the Armed Forces occupational pension scheme for individuals who had left the armed forces and were taking positions in close security work in places such as Iraq, Afghanistan/Iran etc....and also anti-piracy positions...

Dave Clark himself was not a regulated adviser, he was a consultant to these clients and advised them on their armed forces transfers only (my emphasis), he was a qualified accountant and was a member of the Chartered Institute of Accountants.

He was currently putting them into an international Friends Provident Bond (my emphasis), the underlying investments were regulated.”*

This describes an advice process. It indicates that Caledonian was advising consumers on transfers out of armed forces schemes and “putting them into” an investment bond. I think the only reasonable conclusion which could be drawn from that description was that advice was likely being given. Given these statements, it would be difficult to imagine a situation where Caledonian were giving that kind of tailored guidance without giving advice on the merits of transferring.

In the ‘Non-Regulated Introducer Profile’ signed and dated in March 2012, Caledonian’s sales process was described as:

“Referral – Visit – Analysis – Visit”

That clearly involved more than just a simple introduction. It is a description that also supports my finding that Caledonian were involved in an advice process.

At the very least this should have led to further questions being asked by Options of Caledonian and Mr Y. In terms of Mr Y, a reasonable line of enquiry would have been to ask him if he thought he was receiving advice as to whether to set up a SIPP and/or transfer his pension benefits to it and/or then make subsequent investments within the SIPP. And I think given Mr Y’s subsequent testimony, the answers to those questions would have led to the conclusion that advice was being given.

On 26 April 2013 an Options employee in its compliance department sent an email to a number of Options employees. She raised concerns about Caledonian’s business practices. She said:

“We have a responsibility to proactively monitor our distribution channels to ensure our products do not end up with customers for whom it is not suitable. Based on recent correspondence with Caledonian I am increasingly concerned by their business practices and therefore believe we should review our relationship with them and the business they have introduced. I will arrange a meeting for next week to discuss. In the meantime we need to determine the answers to the questions below to help facilitate our discussions.”

There are a couple of different answers to those questions, one expressing more concern than the other. But of critical importance is that following the ensuing internal discussion, Options asked questions on 10 May 2013 (that I’ve set out in the history above) about any advice given by Caledonian.

Although we haven’t been provided with a copy of the actual response to this e-mail, a discussion of Caledonian’s responses to these questions led Options to conclude:

“Following a detailed review of the process and documentation concerns were raised regarding whether the clients could be deemed to be receiving advice through an unregulated entity.

Following a request for further clarification on these points we have not been able to satisfy ourselves that this is not the case."

And this effectively ended the relationship with Caledonian.

In my view these are investigations and questions, which Options, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good practice at the time, ought to have been undertaking or asking at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian. The need to ask these questions was clear based on the information available to Options before Mr Y was introduced to it. Options clearly had its own concerns about Caledonian's operation in 2013 – and this was something that it should and could have explored and interrogated much earlier and certainly before accepting Mr Y's introduction.

I believe the knowledge that Caledonian was providing advice – whether acquired at the outset of the relationship with Caledonian or before or during the course of Mr Y's application – should've been a red flag and given Options significant cause for concern. I say this because it suggests a number of risks/issues, including:

- The potential for breaches of the Principles, regulations and/or law.
- There being no evidence to show Caledonian had competency to give advice, particularly with respect to pension transfers.
- There being nothing to show proper advice processes were being followed.
- The risk of obvious significant detriment to large numbers of individuals to forgo guaranteed pension benefits.

I think these are all things which, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good industry practice, Options should have factored into its thinking.

Where were the activities taking place?

I haven't seen evidence that, prior to May 2013, Options established where Caledonian would be conducting business. It was therefore in no position to know what, if any, regulatory regimes applied.

The business profile completed at the outset of Options' relationship with Caledonian records that Caledonian said its clients, "were generally still resident in UK but some were now living abroad in various countries such as Thailand, Germany, Spain etc.". The introducer profile completed at the outset of the relationship records that Caledonian had branches in Chile, Peru, Columbia, Argentina, Brazil and Switzerland.

Options noted in 2013 that, as to the question of where Caledonian was meeting with clients and its regulatory status, the position was, "unknown".

So it is fair to say Options wasn't in a position to know whether Caledonian was following any applicable regulations and laws as it simply didn't know where it was carrying out its activities or, at the very least, was aware the activities were potentially being carried out in several different jurisdictions. And then it didn't take sufficient steps to ascertain what regulations and laws applied in each of those countries and whether Caledonian was acting within them.

In this case, I think Options should've been particularly concerned about whether advice was being given (or any other regulated activity carried on) in the UK as Caledonian wasn't authorised by the FSA or, later, the FCA.

On the Non-Regulated Introducer Profile form completed in March 2012, in response to the question asking what measures were in place to “ensure the Firm engage legal advice on the activities it carries out to ensure regulated activities are not carried out?”, the following answer was given by Caledonian:

“Majority of business carried out in unregulated jurisdictions but where regulations apply we are licensed to carry out our activities.”

But, as mentioned above, Options was also made aware that “generally” consumers who would be introduced to it were UK residents. So it’s not clear how the Caledonian business model worked logistically - how could Options be satisfied, on a general basis, that the relevant activities would not take place in the UK? I think Options should’ve been alive to the risk that in some of the cases at least, some of the activities might take place in the UK.

Rights under a personal pension scheme are a security and a relevant investment. Under Article 25(1) Regulated Activity Order (RAO), making arrangements for another person to buy and sell these types of investments is a regulated activity. And under Article 25(2) RAO, making arrangements with a view to a person who participates in the arrangements buying and selling these types of investments is also a regulated activity.

So, in this case if Caledonian made arrangements – i.e. assisting in the completion of the SIPP application form for onward investment in the FPI bond in the UK, that would be a regulated activity. It is clear Caledonian did undertake this activity in this case and so Options should have been aware a regulated activity had been undertaken by Caledonian in the UK even if it assumed any advice had been given in Jordan.

Furthermore, if Options accepted the advice was given in Jordan, I’ve not seen any evidence to show it checked that Caledonian had any required authority to undertake this activity in Jordan. And there’s no evidence whatsoever that Mr Y had any connection to Jordan or ever met anyone from Caledonian there.

Caledonian’s competence to undertake pension transfers

The proposed business model involved former members of the armed forces who worked in security related jobs in hazardous areas. The business model was not one involving, say, former financial advisers or other finance professionals.

There is therefore no reason to think that the typical client Caledonian was proposing on introducing had a good level of understanding of pensions or were in a position to work out for themselves if a pension transfer was in their best interests. They would be reliant on Caledonian’s advice.

The introductions involved transfers out of a defined benefit pension scheme into a UK SIPP for investment in several investments within an FPI bond. As discussed, the transfer of defined benefit (final salary) pensions are usually not in the customer’s best interests, are complex and present a variety of consequences and matters which the ordinary individual would be hard pressed to understand without professional financial advice.

Given that Options knew that the intention was to introduce around 50 individuals a month, I think it’s fair to say Options should’ve satisfied itself that there was no risk of detriment to these consumers. In any event, as I will refer to later in this decision, it should have had concerns that a small business such as Caledonian could competently deal with such a volume of business.

However, the information Caledonian disclosed to Options revealed that it didn't have any particular qualifications or expertise in pension transfers.

On the Non-regulated Introducer Profile document completed in March 2012, under the section headed Training and Information, the following response was given to a question as to what training was provided to its agents:

"Ongoing product training and accompanied meetings."

In response to a question about the specific pension training that was delivered to its agents the answer given was:

"Visits to providers directly."

There is no mention of any type of professional qualification (whether that be in the UK or any other territorial jurisdiction) relating to pensions.

On the undated Overseas Introducer Proforma Document, the section headed Professional Qualification was recorded as 'high risk'. The notes said that:

"No qualifications documented other than meeting notes from March 2012 where David Clark stated he was a qualified accountant and member of Chartered Institute of Accountants."

I think it likely this post-dates Mr Y's application, but it demonstrates that Options didn't know if any of Caledonian's staff had any qualifications to give advice on occupational pension scheme transfers.

So Options was aware that Caledonian's employees didn't likely have any qualifications to give advice as to pensions. And it seems that any steps to ascertain whether any qualifications were held would have revealed they weren't. The steps taken in May 2013 where Options belatedly made enquiries of Caledonian, which as outlined above I think it should have actioned much earlier and certainly before accepting Mr Y's application, resulted in Options requiring all the transfers to be reviewed by a UK FCA regulated adviser. To my mind, this indicates that when Options did ask further questions about Caledonian's expertise in dealing with pensions, it would appear that not only did it become aware that Caledonian's staff did not possess adequate expertise but it also took steps to try and address that.

So, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good practice, Options should've concluded at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian, or at the very least by the time of Mr Y's application, that Caledonian was proposing to give advice to bring about a large volume of business relating to a complex product for which it didn't have the appropriate qualifications.

The transfer process

As mentioned above, a defined benefit transfer is a complex transaction. It also involves many risks, and potentially the loss of significant guaranteed benefits. For this reason, advice on such transactions is tightly regulated in the UK and there are standards of good practice that those giving the advice are expected to follow. This means several steps need to be taken as part of the advice process and documentation such as fact-finds, suitability reports, transfer analysis reports (TVAS), and illustrations, all of which generally feature in the advice process. The purpose is to ensure any advice given takes into account all relevant factors, is suitable, and the recipient of the advice is in a fully informed position, where they understand the benefits they are giving up and the risks associated with the transfer.

Although the relevant UK regulatory requirements only apply in the UK, I think Options, acting fairly and reasonably, should have satisfied itself that a similar process was being followed here, even if the advice was being given outside the UK. I say this because, given that Caledonian's starting point appears to have been that the consumers it dealt with would be transferring out of the defined benefit scheme (i.e. it seems to have taken the view a transfer was suitable for all) there was a clear risk of consumer detriment if consumers were not in a fully informed position and therefore able to understand the risks associated with the transfer.

I do not say Options should have checked any advice that was given – but it should have taken steps to ascertain if a reasonable process was in place and consumers were taking these steps on an informed basis. And I think if it had undertaken such steps and carried out even a cursory investigation of the individuals being introduced to it, then it would have become aware no reasonable process was in place and consumers were not fully informed of the risks. As discussed, I think it would have also quickly discovered that at least some of the individuals being introduced to it, including Mr Y, had received what amounted to advice about the transfer from an unregulated introducer.

It seems Options took these steps, to an extent, belatedly in May 2013. And, in common with the other steps taken in May 2013 that appears to have led it to the conclusion that what was in place was insufficient. However, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good practice, Options should have concluded at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian, or at the very least by the time of Mr Y's application, that there was a significant risk of consumer detriment, that Caledonian didn't have a process in place which supported suitable advice being given or that ensured consumers were fully informed of the risks.

Other issues Options ought to have identified and considered

There were also further issues Options ought to have identified and considered, based on what it knew or ought to have known by the time of Mr Y's application. In summary, Options should've considered that:

- The high volume of business being brought about by Caledonian suggested a risk of consumer detriment.
- Caledonian was taking a high level of commission, which may not have been disclosed.
- Caledonian failed to provide its company accounts, despite repeated requests for copies of them from Options.

Volume of business

Prior to accepting Mr Y's introduction, Options was told that Caledonian would be introducing about 50 applications a month. I also note that Caledonian introduced around 40 applications a month over the course of its relationship with Options and Options would therefore have been aware a similar volume was being seen in practice.

It's clear that Options kept a good level of management information about the number and nature of introductions that Caledonian had made. I think this is an example of good practice. However, I don't think it was fair and reasonable to simply keep records rather than evaluating that information and taking steps based on it. As highlighted in the 2009 Thematic Review Report, the reason why the records are important is so that potentially unsuitable SIPP's can be identified.

I think that Options should have been concerned that such a high volume of introductions from only occupational pension schemes was being referred to it, and according to Options, on an execution only basis. As discussed above, as a professional in the pension industry, Options ought to have known about the following guidance in the FSA (later FCA's) handbook in 2012:

"COBS 19.1.6 G

When advising a retail client who is, or is eligible to be, a member of a defined benefits occupational pension scheme whether to transfer or opt out, a firm should start by assuming that a transfer or opt out will not be suitable (my emphasis). A firm should only then consider a transfer or opt out to be suitable if it can clearly demonstrate, on contemporary evidence, that the transfer or opt-out is in the client's best interests."

I accept this aims to define the expectation of a regulated financial adviser when determining suitability of a pension transfer, but it emphasises the regulator's concern about the potential detriment such a transaction could expose a consumer to. And, being a regulated firm with a requirement to ensure its clients were being treated fairly, I'd expect Options to have been familiar with the guidance contained in COBS – even if it didn't apply to it.

Caledonian's business model, as set out to Options, appears to run counter to this, insofar as the starting point appeared to be an assumption that the transfer was suitable. When considered alongside the high volume of business being brought about by Caledonian, Options, acting fairly and reasonably, should've identified a significant risk of consumer detriment.

Options ought to have been aware that the introduction of such a large volume of applications for pension transfers (an estimated 50 a month), including Mr Y's application, on a non-advised basis was unusual. I think Options should have been concerned about the motivations and competence of Caledonian and have had adequate risk management controls in place to have allowed it to conclude very quickly that there was a high probability that much, if not all, of the business introduced by Caledonian (which was transfers from occupational pension schemes) carried with it a high risk of significant consumer detriment.

Was it really reasonable to believe that all these introductions would be from non-advised individuals and that significant consumer detriment wouldn't result? And not make further enquiries on that assumption? I don't believe so and I don't believe Options was fulfilling its duties under the Principles by accepting introductions on that basis, and with that knowledge, without interrogating the matter further.

Commission

I also think the level of commission that was being paid to Caledonian was anomalous, given what limited service Caledonian said to Options it was providing. I think this should have given Options cause for concern. Whilst an introduction commission of only £250 was paid from Mr Y's pension fund by Options to Caledonian, I also understand from the July 2014 FPS Report that significant commission of around 8% was to be paid by FPI out of the fund over 5 years, although the Options final response refers to a period of 8 years. Nonetheless, FPS said this meant that Mr Y's sum invested in March 2013 from a circa £25,500 pension transfer, was effectively only around £22,900. And that means that Caledonian was to get around £3,000 for what was apparently a non-advised introduction.

It isn't clear, from the evidence I have seen, that Mr Y was made aware of this at the time – and I note he now says he wasn't. I think Options would have been privy to the details of this commission at the time, and would have known about similar levels of commission on applications it dealt with before Mr Y's.

In my opinion the commission paid on what was a relatively small pension pot, was very high for an 'introduction' and should've given Options cause for concern, given the nature of the business being introduced. As noted earlier in my findings, there is no evidence to show Caledonian carried out any of the usual work associated with a defined benefit transfer that would justify such a fee. Nor have I seen any other evidence to show there was any justification for such a high level of commission in the circumstances. I think this level of commission ought to have been another cause for Options to be concerned that Caledonian was putting its own interests ahead of the interests of the customers.

Overall, when considered alongside the high volumes of near identical introductions of business being made by Caledonian, I think this level of commission raises questions about the motives and role of Caledonian and shows an additional risk of consumer detriment.

Caledonian's Accounts

I note that Options made repeated requests for Caledonian's accounts. It sent several emails to Caledonian between March and August 2012. Options also explained in its email of 23 March 2012 that in order to comply with its own compliance procedures this was needed. On 27 April 2012, Options started accepting introductions from Caledonian having not received its requested company accounts or the passports of all its directors. This is something that was discussed in August 2012 by Options employees as being required. The 'undated document', but likely of March 2013 - the "Overseas Introducer Assessment Proforma" - set out that Options had noted that Caledonian had no UK branch or EEA regulatory details and it could not discover how long it had been trading. It also noted that it still hadn't received any accounts from Caledonian.

But I haven't seen any evidence that the accounts were ever provided. In my opinion, it is fair and reasonable that Options should have met its own standards and should have checked Caledonian's accounts at the outset before accepting any business from it. And, based on Caledonian's conduct, it seems very unlikely accounts would ever have been forthcoming.

Caledonian's reluctance to provide basic information should also have been a further factor which ought to have led Options to question whether it should enter into or continue a relationship with Caledonian. It calls into question the competence and motivations of Caledonian and the ability of Caledonian to organise its affairs. It also meant Options was missing information which might be critical to the decision as to whether to enter into business with Caledonian. It isn't clear why Options accepted introductions without it.

It's also notable that Options accepted and set up Mr Y's SIPP when it was still waiting for this information from Caledonian.

In conclusion

Taking all of the above into consideration – individually and cumulatively – I think in the circumstances it is fair and reasonable for me to conclude that Options ought reasonably to have concluded, had it complied with its regulatory obligations which required it to conduct sufficient due diligence on Caledonian before accepting business from it and to act on information received about the conduct of Caledonian before continuing to accept business from it, that it should not accept business from Caledonian, including Mr Y. I therefore conclude that it is fair and reasonable in the circumstances to say that Options shouldn't have accepted Mr Y's application from Caledonian.

I say this because, as discussed in more detail above:

- Options says that at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian the arrangement was to accept introductions on the basis they would be non-advised/execution only. But the evidence should have caused it to question that, including in the case of Mr Y.
- Options says it acted on the basis that all of the introductions made by Caledonian would be made so that individuals could transfer pensions from an occupational defined benefit pension scheme.
- Options was aware that there was to be a significant number of such introductions – around 50 a month.
- Options should've undertaken a reasonable level of due diligence as to the introductions to be made and the introductions it was receiving. If it had done so, then it would have likely discovered that Caledonian was giving advice as to transferring pensions and the investments to follow, something Options says was not the basis on which it was to accept introductions.
- Options should've been aware that Caledonian was undertaking one or more regulated activities in the UK, without authorisation. And there was no evidence to show it was meeting any relevant regulations or laws, if activities were taking place outside the UK.
- Options should have been, or were, aware that Caledonian's staff didn't have the qualifications – and therefore expertise – to give advice on defined benefit scheme transfers.
- There was no evidence to show a proper advice process had been followed and Mr Y was therefore not able to make a fully informed decision about the transfer.
- Caledonian was taking a very high level of fees and commission for what it said was an execution only service.
- Options hadn't obtained a reasonable level of information about Caledonian as a business before it started accepting introductions – and this persisted for most of its relationship with Caledonian.

Each of these points shows a high risk of potential consumer detriment, and calls into question the motivation and competency of Caledonian. So I think that, acting fairly and reasonably, Options should've declined to accept Mr Y's application because of any of these points – and certainly should have done so when considering them cumulatively.

Did Options act fairly and reasonably in proceeding with Mr Y's instructions?

In my view, for the reasons given, Options simply should've refused to accept Mr Y's application. So things shouldn't have got beyond that. Had Options acted in accordance with its regulatory obligations and best practice, it's fair and reasonable in my view to conclude that it should not have accepted Mr Y's application to open a SIPP.

I acknowledge Mr Y was asked to sign an Options member's declaration on 26 November 2012 and it would have put some reliance on that. I note this document does give clear warnings about the loss of benefits that would result in the transfer to the Options SIPP. The indemnities also sought to confirm that Mr Y wouldn't hold Options responsible for any liability resulting from the investments.

But I don't think this document demonstrates Options acted fairly and reasonably when proceeding with Mr Y's instructions.

For the reasons set out, I don't think Options should've accepted the application from Caledonian. So, Mr Y shouldn't have got to the point of signing a member declaration as the business shouldn't have come about at all. Furthermore, asking Mr Y to sign a declaration absolving Options of all its responsibilities when it ought to have known that Mr Y's dealings with Caledonian were putting him at significant risk wasn't the fair and reasonable thing to do. I also note that the declaration was based on Mr Y having "received full and appropriate advice from Caledonian International" where, for the reasons I have given, Options ought to have been aware Caledonian didn't have the competency to give such advice.

My remit is, of course, to make a decision on what I think is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances. And my view is that it's fair and reasonable to say that just asking Mr Y to sign declarations wasn't an effective way for Options to meet its regulatory obligations to treat him fairly, given the concerns Options ought to have identified about his introduction.

I'm also satisfied that, had Options not accepted Mr Y's application to open a SIPP introduced from Caledonian, the arrangement for Mr Y wouldn't have come about in the first place, and the loss he suffered could've been avoided.

Mr Y was contacted by Caledonian whilst he was working abroad and he wasn't actively looking to do anything with his pension. And Caledonian was clearly reliant on Options to facilitate things – but for Options' acceptance of the application, Mr Y's business wouldn't have been able to proceed.

In any event, I think it fair to say Mr Y should simply have been unable to complete this transaction. I don't think any SIPP operator, acting properly, would have dealt with Caledonian.

Options might argue that another SIPP operator would've accepted Mr Y's application, had it declined it. But I don't think it's fair and reasonable to say that Options shouldn't compensate Mr Y for his loss on the basis of speculation that another SIPP operator would have made the same mistakes as I've found it did.

I think it's fair instead to assume that another SIPP provider would have complied with its regulatory obligations and good industry practice, and therefore wouldn't have accepted the application from Caledonian, or would have terminated the transaction before completion.

For all the reasons I've set out, I'm satisfied that it would not be fair to say Mr Y's actions mean he should bear the loss arising as a result of Options' failings. In the circumstances, I am satisfied that Options should not have asked him to sign the declaration at all. For the reasons I have set out, I am satisfied that the application should never have been accepted in the first place.

Putting things right

My aim is to return Mr Y to the position he would now be in but for what I consider to be Options' failure to carry out adequate due diligence checks before accepting his SIPP application. I appreciate that Options has said that it doesn't think Mr Y has suffered a loss.

But it can't know that until the requisite calculations have taken place. And I doubt very much that the benefits Mr Y will get from the SIPP are equivalent to what he would have got from his armed forces pension.

In light of the above, Options should calculate fair compensation by comparing the current position to the position Mr Y would be in if he had not transferred from his existing pension.

In summary, Options should:

1. Calculate the loss Mr Y has suffered as a result of making the transfer.
2. Take ownership of any investments that cannot be surrendered if possible.
3. Pay compensation for the loss into Mr Y's pension. If that is not possible pay compensation for the loss to Mr Y direct. In either case the payment should take into account necessary adjustments set out below.
4. Pay £500 for the trouble and upset caused to Mr Y.

I'll explain how Options should carry out the calculation set out at 1-3 above in further detail as well as explaining my reasons for awarding 4:

1. Calculate the loss Mr Y has suffered as a result of making the transfer ("the loss calculation")

On 2 August 2022, the FCA launched a consultation on new defined benefit (DB) transfer redress guidance and has set out its proposals in a consultation document - CP22/15-calculating redress for non-compliant pension transfer advice.

In this consultation, the FCA has said that it considers that the current redress methodology in Finalised Guidance (FG) 17/19 (Guidance for firms on how to calculate redress for unsuitable defined benefit pension transfers) remains appropriate and fundamental changes are not necessary. However, its review has identified some areas where the FCA considers it could improve or clarify the methodology to ensure it continues to provide appropriate redress.

A policy statement was published on 28 November 2022 which set out the new rules and guidance-<https://www.fca.org.uk/publication/policy/ps22-13.pdf>. The new rules will come into effect on 1 April 2023.

The FCA has said that it expects firms to continue to calculate and offer compensation to their customers using the existing guidance in FG 17/9 for the time being. But until changes take effect firms should give customers the option of waiting for their compensation to be calculated in line with the new rules and guidance.

We've previously asked Mr Y's representative whether Mr Y preferred any redress to be calculated now in line with current guidance or wait for the new guidance / rules to come into effect.

Mr Y didn't make a choice, so as set out previously, I've assumed in this case he doesn't want to wait for the new guidance to come into effect.

I am satisfied that a calculation in line with FG17/9 remains appropriate and, if a loss is identified, will provide fair redress for Mr Y.

So, Options should calculate redress for Mr Y's Armed Forces pension in line with The FCA's pension review guidance in October 2017 (<https://www.fca.org.uk/publication/finalised-guidance/fg17-9.pdf>) using the most recent financial assumptions published.

If the complaint hasn't been settled in full and final settlement by the time any new guidance or rules come into effect, I'd expect Options to carry out a calculation in line with the updated rules and/or guidance in any event.

2. Take ownership of any investments held within the SIPP which cannot be surrendered

In order for the SIPP to be closed and further SIPP fees to be prevented, the investment(s) need(s) to be removed from the SIPP. To do this, Options should calculate an amount it is willing to accept as a commercial value for any investments that cannot be surrendered and pay that sum into the SIPP and take ownership of the relevant investments. This amount should be taken into account for the loss calculation.

If Options is unwilling or unable to purchase the investment(s) the value of them should be assumed to be nil for the purposes of the loss calculation. Provided Mr Y is compensated in full, Options may ask Mr Y to provide an undertaking to account to it for the net amount of any payment the SIPP may receive from the investment(s). That undertaking should allow for the effect of any tax and charges on the amount Mr Y may receive from the investment(s) and any eventual sums he would be able to access. Options should meet any costs in drawing up the undertaking and any advice required by Mr Y to approve it.

If Options doesn't take ownership of the investment(s), and it/they continue to be held in Mr Y's SIPP, there will be ongoing fees in relation to the administration of that SIPP. Mr Y would not be responsible for those fees if Options hadn't accepted the transfer of his personal pension into the SIPP. So, I think it is fair and reasonable that Options must waive any SIPP fees until such a time as Mr Y can dispose of the investment(s) and close the SIPP.

3. Pay compensation to Mr Y for loss he has suffered calculated in (1).

Since the loss Mr Y has suffered is within his pension it is right that I try to restore the value of his pension provision if that is possible. So, if possible, the compensation for the loss should be paid into his SIPP. The compensation shouldn't be paid into the pension if it would conflict with any existing protection or allowance. Payment into the pension should allow for the effect of charges and any available tax relief. This may mean the compensation should be increased to cover the charges and reduced to notionally allow for the income tax relief Mr Y could claim. The notional allowance should be calculated using Mr Y's marginal rate of tax.

On the other hand, Options may not be able to pay the compensation into the SIPP. If so compensation for the loss should be paid to Mr Y direct. But had it been possible to pay the compensation into the pension, it would have provided a taxable income. Therefore, the compensation for the loss paid to Mr Y should be reduced to notionally allow for any income tax that would otherwise have been paid. The notional allowance should be calculated using Mr Y's marginal rate of tax in retirement. For example, if Mr Y is likely to be a basic rate taxpayer in retirement, the notional allowance would equate to a reduction in the total amount equivalent to the current basic rate of tax. However, if Mr Y would have been able to take a tax-free lump sum, the notional allowance should be applied to 75% of the total amount.

If Options believes other parties to be wholly or partly responsible for the loss, it is free to pursue those other parties. So, if Mr Y's loss does not exceed £150,000, or if Options accepts my recommendation below that it should pay the full loss as calculated above, the compensation payable to Mr Y should be contingent on the assignment by him to Options of any rights of action he may have against other parties in relation to his transfer to the SIPP and the investments, if Options is to request this. Options should cover the reasonable cost of drawing up, and Mr Y's approving, any assignment required.

If the loss exceeds £150,000 and Options does not accept my recommendation to pay the full amount, any assignment of Mr Y's rights should allow him to retain all rights to the difference between £150,000 and the full loss as calculated above.

4. Pay £500 for the trouble and upset caused.

Mr Y transferred his pension away from a valuable defined benefits pension to a SIPP and had to suffer the loss of those benefits.

I think it's fair to say this would have caused Mr Y some distress and inconvenience. So, I consider that a payment of £500 is appropriate to compensate for that.

determination and money award: my final decision is that Options pay Mr Y compensation as set out above, up to a maximum of £150,000 plus any interest payable.

As I've said above, until the calculations are carried out, I don't know how much the compensation will be, and it may be nowhere near £150,000 which is the maximum sum that I'm able to award in Mr Y's complaint. But I'll also make a recommendation below in the event that the compensation is to exceed this sum, although I can't require that Options pays this.

The compensation resulting from the loss assessment must, where possible, be paid to Mr Y within 90 days of the date Options receives notification of his acceptance of my final decision. Further interest must be added to the compensation amount at the rate of 8% a year simple, from the date it is told of the acceptance of my final decision by Mr Y to the date of settlement, for any time in excess of 90 days that it takes Options to pay Mr Y this compensation.

It's possible that data gathering for a SERPS adjustment may mean that the actual time taken to settle goes beyond the 90-day period allowed for settlement above – and so any period of time, where the only outstanding item required to undertake the calculation is data from DWP, may be added to the 90-day period in which interest won't apply.

I will also add here that income tax may be payable on any interest paid pursuant to this award. If Options deducts income tax from the interest, it should tell Mr Y how much has been taken off. Options should give Mr Y a tax deduction certificate for any interest if Mr Y asks for one, so he can reclaim the tax from HM Revenue & Customs if appropriate.

recommendation: If the amount produced by the calculation of fair compensation exceeds £150,000, I also recommend that Options pays Mr Y the balance. I further recommend interest to be added to this balance at the rate of 8% a year simple for any time, in excess of 90 days, that it takes Options to pay Mr Y from the date it receives notification of his acceptance of the decision, as set out above.

If Mr Y accepts my determination, the money award and the requirements of this decision are binding on Options. My recommendation isn't binding on Options.

Further, it's unlikely that Mr Y can accept my determination and go to court to ask for the balance of the compensation owing to him after the money award has been paid. Mr Y may want to consider getting independent legal advice before deciding whether to accept my final decision.

My final decision

It's my final decision to uphold Mr Y's complaint and I require that Options UK Personal Pensions LLP calculate and pay the award, and take the actions, set out above.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mr Y to accept or reject my decision before 6 January 2023.
