

The complaint

Mr F has complained that he was unsuitably advised by Central Markets Investment Management Ltd (CMIM), as a trustee of his Small Self-Administered Scheme (SSAS), to invest in a Cape Verde hotel development of The Resort Group (TRG). Mr F is represented in this complaint by a claims management company (CMC).

What happened

In late 2013 Mr F was aged 54 and owned a mortgaged property, but had little else in the way of savings. Mr F's CMC believes he was cold called as a result of a PPI claims firm having his details, and told he would receive great returns due to the regular use of the hotel property - much better returns than what his existing pension was capable of. It says he had a low attitude to risk.

Mr F can recall dealing with a firm with "Money Matters" in its name. A firm called Consumer Money Matters worked closely (and shared directors) with Your Choice Pensions (YCP) - and we know that CMIM had signed an introducer agreement with YCP.

As part of the arrangements to transfer Mr F's pension, on 15 October 2013 a new employing company was incorporated; named after the road in which he lives. And on 17 October 2013 he signed terms of business agreeing that CMIM would provide a letter of advice in relation to TRG for the purposes of s.36 of the Pensions Act 1995 ("PA'95").

(For reference, s.36 of PA'95 requires trustees of an occupational pension scheme such as a SSAS to obtain and consider written advice 'on the question whether the investment is satisfactory having regard to the requirements of regulations under subsection (1), so far as relating to the suitability of investments...'. s.36 also warns that the advice required under this section may constitute the carrying on of a regulated activity under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 ('FSMA').)

CMIM's terms of business clarified the following:

- CMIM was a regulated firm, but that the service it would provide was not regulated, as it related to an unregulated investment.
- It was providing the service to trustees of a SSAS.
- No advice was being given on investments regulated under s.22 of FSMA and other than the Cape Verde investment.
- No 'individual suitability advice...which takes into account your personal financial circumstances' was being given.

Mr F also signed an (undated) indicative investment form, setting out how much of his pension he was looking to invest in TRG and how much in CMIM's discretionary fund management (DFM) service. He expressed an intention of investing 100% into TRG. However Mr F also has a copy of a CMIM application form for a DFM account on which it was proposed he invest £10,000. That application form refers to him being introduced to CMIM by YCP.

On 16 December 2013 a SSAS was established by trust deed for Mr F's new employer with him as sole trustee, and Cantwell Grove Ltd (CGL) as SSAS administrator. The fee to administer the SSAS was £500+VAT annually. In other cases we've seen where the clients were introduced to CMIM by YCP or its sister company (and the client has kept all correspondence), YCP sent them a covering letter itself enclosing 'written advice' from CMIM on their 'chosen investment' into commercial property in Cape Verde.

Mr F does not have his copy of this so-called 'dear Trustee' letter, but I can see from its submissions that CMIM accepts it allowed the introducer to send this to mutual clients without further CMIM authorisation. It doesn't refer to the trustee by name and mentions that the business has been introduced by YCP. It repeats that CMIM is providing the trustee with advice that it understands to be unregulated, because a SSAS is not regulated (and furthermore, the TRG investment involves direct ownership in property). It goes on:

'We have researched the commercial property investment, The Resort Group, the hotel operator (Melia Hotels International), and the wider aspects of ownership and security; and our conclusion is that it is an appropriate investment albeit when considered in the light of sensible diversification of a portfolio of an investor's overall wealth and that an effective "exit" strategy is planned in order to coincide with the needs of the investor. The Resort Group have cooperated with our research.'

In the letter CMIM explained the reference to diversification meant that its advice would be to consider other investments alongside the property investment that were low risk and unconnected with it. And the reference to an exit strategy was that the trustee needed to plan ahead if they wanted to draw benefits from the SSAS – in particular purchasing an annuity. It went on to say (with my emphasis):

'The investment is not suitable for a cautious investor who needs the protection of the UK investor compensation and regulatory environment, as both a SSAS and the overseas investment have no such regulatory protection. There are a range of risks that we have seen have been clearly documented to the investor and should be considered carefully: The value of any investment can fall as well as rise. Land or commercial property should not necessarily be considered as a liquid investment; it may therefore not be suitable should you need access to the capital at short notice or the timeframe desired by the trustee....

Commercial property investments tend to incur ongoing costs and charges, which may not always be covered by any possible rental returns. The value of rental returns is dependent on occupancy demand, which cannot be guaranteed.

Investments held overseas may have additional risks such as currency fluctuations, which may impact on any returns when converted back into sterling; political risk to ownership and title; and commercial risk to the delivery and management of a property/resort. You may wish to take independent legal advice to ensure you understand all these issues...

Our view is that the investment is appropriate but only as part of a diversified holding according to an investor's attitude to risk and capacity for withstanding loss.

You should ensure that you only invest what you can afford to lose...We believe as core principles that where an investor is looking to retire within ten years then no more than 50% of their investment should be invested directly within commercial property, and the remainder should be held in liquid investments. Our advice to investors is to consider the need for diversification carefully...We have not reviewed other overseas commercial property investment opportunities and accordingly are not providing you with advice as to the merits of the proposed investment as against other such investment opportunities. If you still have any doubts we recommend that you seek independent financial advice...'

The letter went on to propose CMIM's MVA Balanced Portfolio to provide the suggested diversification into other, lower risk investments – although in this case Mr F seems to have elected by completing a form in July 2014 to withdraw the amount he required the most liquidity for (the tax-free cash entitlement) and then invest the remainder in TRG.

On 17 January 2014 CGL requested the transfer of £37,513 from Mr F's Sun Life pension using forms he'd signed. It didn't receive the transfer proceeds until 11 September 2014, potentially due to the heightened checks providers were carrying out to prevent pensions liberation/scams. On 28 August 2014 Mr F had signed a letter confirming his instructions to invest in TRG were based on CMIM's advice. The standard wording in use by CGL at that time read as follows:

'Prior to issuing this letter I have obtained and considered the advice letter [CMIM] has produced in relation to the Cape Verde investment opportunity. I believe [CMIM] to be an appropriately qualified advisor for the purposes of section 36 of the Pensions Act 1995, in relation to the question of whether that investment opportunity is satisfactory in terms of
(a) its suitability as an investment in the SSAS, and
(b) the need for diversification, in so far as is appropriate to the circumstances of the SSAS.'

£25,831 of the transfer proceeds were invested in TRG with £9,378 paid out to Mr F as his tax-free cash sum and the remainder left as cash. CGL wrote to Mr F confirming this on 4 June 2015, and it noted this again in his January 2016 annual statement. (Our investigator had the impression that Mr F didn't recall getting this sum; if that is correct, he is at liberty to query this with CGL himself.)

My understanding is that discounts were to be offered on the purchase, paid back to investors by monthly instalments at 7%pa until the resort opened. In Mr F's case, he received a single payment back from TRG of £2,410 on 18 July 2016 (although £668 then seems to have been returned to TRG that November). Mr F's recollection is that he would receive a guaranteed 5% return in the first year whilst the property was under construction only. From July 2017 onwards Mr F's SSAS then started getting quarterly rental income from the resort (the first two payments being £201 and £118).

The UK limited company via which Mr F invested into TRG had entered into separate contracts with developers to build the property, and to pay a third party to manage it. I gather these payments have since tailed off as the resort has proved unprofitable.

Mr F's CMC complained to CMIM in November 2018 that the investment in TRG was wholly inappropriate for his SSAS. CMIM didn't respond to the complaint and it couldn't locate Mr F in its records when it was referred to the Financial Ombudsman Service. Subsequently it employed a legal representative to deal with the complaint.

Our investigator spoke to Mr F directly several times. He told our investigator that he was dissatisfied with the rate of growth on his existing Sun Life policy so he was looking around to do something different. He was attracted by the initial guaranteed rate of return on TRG, but was unaware of the attached costs and the problems he'd face when trying to access it. He was led to believe (potentially by the introducer) that it was low risk.

CMIM has made a number of submissions, both on this case and during the course of very similar complaints for other individuals. I summarise all of its points below:

- Much of CMIM's data was lost or corrupted following its IT migration to a new system following the decentralisation from its FX trading company in 2017.
- It accepts that TRG appears to meet the legal definition of a collective investment scheme, albeit an unregulated one, following Asset Land v FCA [2016] UKSC 17, although it didn't realise this at the time.
- CMIM was first approached by YCP in mid-2013 and knew customers were in the process of establishing CGL SSAS's to invest in TRG. CMIM's only financial benefit arose out of the opportunity to promote its DFM service for the residual funds. It attended numerous meetings with the marketers of the SSAS, including YCP.
- At no point did CMIM recommend or influence cautious investors to invest in TRG. It concluded that TRG was 'risky' and only appropriate when considered as part of a diverse portfolio where an effective 'exit' strategy was planned. It promoted its DFM services as an 'alternative' and/or as diversification – as it was a 'low risk' portfolio of Exchange Traded Funds (ETFs) of major, liquid, equity indices and bonds.

- CMIM had no interaction with Mr F or physical handling of any investment, except when it received instructions to allocate funds to DFM (which did not happen in this case). To the best of its knowledge all communications were routed through CGL.
- The dates trustees received their 'dear Trustee' letter appeared to be very close to the Trust Deed to establish the SSAS. This suggests that no reliance was placed on this letter as the trustees had already decided to invest in TRG, and they also had their own statutory duties as a trustee to invest prudently.
- CGL had told them it would accept the investment (after presumably carrying out its own due diligence into TRG), and required them to sign a letter stating they had relied on CMIM's advice - without CMIM's knowledge. It deliberately misrepresented CMIM as the provider of investment advice that was regulated as a personal recommendation and subject to COBS 9 (suitability) in the FCA handbook.
- If CMIM had been asked to provide such advice it would have declined, as 'it did not have an adviser suitably qualified to provide individual advice in relation to a SSAS'. Its terms of business materially differed from those used in FCA-regulated advice.
- YCP refers to CGL as its 'partner SSAS Administrator'. '...[G]iven their declaration as experts in the field of SSAS pensions, Cantwell Grove's lack of consideration of [inexperienced investors] as a suitable candidate for a SSAS Pension was both reckless and negligent.'

We put some of CMIM's comments to CGL. It said the following:

- It disputes that it acted as a 'funnel' for communications between CMIM and investors. It believes CMIM's involvement was co-ordinated from the outset by YCP.
- 'Prior to consenting to investments, as the scheme administrator, we would fully expect that the trustee would consider advice. The investment advice wouldn't necessarily need to be obtained from a regulated firm, however, it should be from a person or firm that has the relevant knowledge and experience.'

In summary, our investigator took the view that CMIM should have advised Mr F not to invest in TRG: firstly because it was unsuitable for him as an unsophisticated investor, but secondly because to do otherwise would constitute promotion of an unregulated collective investment scheme (UCIS) contrary to the restriction on such promotions. However, as Mr F was already looking to do something else with his pension, the investigator said he'd likely still have changed provider, or funds at the least.

CMIM has responded by way of letters covering several complaints simultaneously. It didn't agree with the investigator. Some of the points it made reiterated its previous submissions. The following is a summary of its new points:

- The only client relationship was between CGL, its intermediaries and the trustees, who received the 'dear Trustee' letters hand-delivered to them in their homes. Naming CMIM gave the pension advice they were giving 'the intended air of credibility'.
- The terms of business between CMIM and the trustees was to ensure that they understood the purpose of the 'dear Trustee' letter. It plainly was not contracting to provide advice that was regulated by the FCA, and denied all liability in such respects. So it was not necessary for CMIM to make itself aware of the personal and financial circumstances of the trustees or their attitude to risk, except for any DFM investment.
- It is a fundamental premise in law that an act of providing negligent advice or information is not, in itself, sufficient to determine the cause(s) of financial loss incurred by the recipient of that advice. The courts must consider whether such breaches of duty of care were the causes of the trustee's loss.
- As in its view Mr F did not rely upon the 'dear Trustee' letter, it 'might just as well have not existed'. That was a view taken by another investigator and so this service was not being consistent in its approach.

- The ‘dear Trustee’ letter was general in nature, not addressed to a named recipient and, most significantly, not specific as to the actual resort to be invested in or the amount of money involved. It contained ample warnings against investing. ‘It was equally unreasonable to make a connection that anyone investing in TRG would not necessarily regard themselves as someone unneeding of easy access to liquid funds’.
- Before CMIM became involved, the trustees had already taken a series of positive actions to establishing an employer and SSAS under trust deed, and executing all the necessary agreements for the SSAS to operate. It cannot be argued that they were induced to take any of these actions by CMIM.
- The people that promoted TRG to Mr F were the original introducers, and that also extended to CGL given the correspondence it prepared for Mr F to authorise the investment. It did not extend to CMIM, as its ‘dear Trustee’ letter did not amount to a ‘significant step’ in him making the investment given the warnings it contained. It also encouraged Mr F to seek independent advice from an IFA.
- Considering all of the above it was wholly unfair and unjust to attribute Mr F’s loss 100% to CMIM. CGL described themselves as specialists in the field of SSAS pensions, and should be held responsible for Mr F’s losses. They were complicit in every step necessary for Mr F to make the investment, and granted their consent to it, which it was in their interest to do as they received remuneration from the SSAS.

CMIM also made some observations on redress, which I’ll address later.

What I’ve decided – and why

I’ve considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what’s fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

The evidence linking Mr F to CMIM on this complaint is not substantial, but I’m satisfied it is nonetheless sufficient to hold CMIM responsible for its role in facilitating the TRG investment. First, Mr F signed terms of business with CMIM that said he would receive advice on this investment. We know this advice was provided in other cases by way of the ‘dear Trustee’ letter. It would not have been an onerous task for the introducer to send Mr F that letter, which seems to have been contemplated as a standard part of the sales process CMIM entered into with YCP.

A CMIM application form was at least initially completed indicating a £10,000 investment in the DFM service. It may be the case that this plan was shelved when Mr F chose to take the maximum 25% tax-free cash upfront from his SSAS instead (as he was approaching the minimum pension age of 55). That may explain why a copy of the terms of business Mr F signed didn’t end up with CMIM, and he is missing from its records – but CMIM wasn’t required to sign these terms to give effect to them.

From the way the dear Trustee letter was written, CMIM clearly knew that the trustee had a legal obligation to refer to its advice on TRG’s suitability – as the evidence demonstrates Mr F did - whether they chose to make a DFM investment or not. CMIM doesn’t seem to have checked with its introducer which people had been given the TRG advice but had a particular reason - as Mr F did in this case - not to become a DFM client. That should not in my view count to Mr F’s disadvantage. On balance, I’m satisfied that he went through the same sales process as other CMIM clients and received a dear Trustee letter.

Did CMIM make a personal recommendation for Mr F to invest in TRG?

I’m satisfied that CMIM did carry out the regulated activity of ‘advising on investments’. This is defined in the FSMA 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (amongst other things) as advice on ‘buying, selling, subscribing for or underwriting a particular investment which is a security or a relevant investment’. (my emphasis)

CMIM appears to be suggesting that the advice in this case was not specific enough because it didn't refer to the particular hotel, or the amount to be invested. But TRG had the characteristics of a UCIS – Mr F would be participating in a (named) pooled property scheme where the hotel resort (including shared facilities) would be operated as a whole. CMIM accepts this was a UCIS. It wasn't necessary for CMIM to refer to the number of the apartment that TRG denoted Mr F's investment by to meet that definition.

I don't think there is a plausible argument here that in the dear Trustee letter CMIM wasn't, at least, carrying out the regulated activity of advising on investments. As CMIM said, it attended 'numerous' preliminary meetings with YCP or CGL and 'reviewed detailed documentation regarding the investment to ensure it was suitable for SSAS investment and as to risk.' However, advice given in 2014 that wasn't a personal recommendation wasn't caught by chapter 9 of COBS – the regulator's rules governing 'suitability'.

I agree CMIM didn't set out to make a personal recommendation. It said in the terms of business that it wasn't giving 'individual suitability advice...which takes into account your personal financial circumstances'. And its 'dear Trustee' letter reminds Mr F that it hadn't assessed those circumstances.

The FCA definition of a personal recommendation, with my emphasis, is:

'a recommendation that is advice on investments, or advice on a home finance transaction and is presented as suitable for the person to whom it is made, or is based on a consideration of the circumstances of that person.

A recommendation is not a personal recommendation if it is issued exclusively through distribution channels or to the public.'

So, the part of the definition before the word 'or' indicates it's possible to make a personal recommendation without considering that person's specific circumstances - if it is presented in such a way that the recipient reasonably believes the firm is endorsing the investment as being suitable for them in particular. But if I approach this from Mr F's position I have to take into account that CMIM told him it wasn't making a personal recommendation; he knew he hadn't met anyone from CMIM; and no 'fact finding' had been done by it.

On balance, I think Mr F ought to have realised that the 'dear Trustee' letter was a prompt for him to consider if he met the circumstances of the person being described in that letter as an appropriate investor into TRG. It left him to some of the work: was he cautious or more tolerant of risk? Did he require access to the funds during the expected duration of the investment? If Mr F felt he met those criteria I can see why CMIM's advice would have carried more weight to him than one issued to the public at large: after all, he had contracted with CMIM for it to provide this advice. But that doesn't of itself mean it was truly a personal recommendation, and I'm not persuaded that it was.

If there's no personal recommendation, COBS 9 doesn't apply. But that also isn't the end of this complaint. CMIM has still given advice in the 'dear Trustee' letter, which isn't negated by it, separately, encouraging him to seek further independent advice. If it thought he was better off doing that then in my view it shouldn't have advised him at all. And it's open to me to consider whether its advice is consistent with the regulator's wider principles (set out at PRIN in the rulebook), and other COBS rules that aren't in chapter 9. But first, it's important to note that as TRG was a UCIS, the restrictions to promotion at s.238 FSMA would also apply.

Did CMIM promote the TRG investment to Mr F, ancillary to its advice?

The glossary definition of promotion in the FCA handbook is 'an invitation or inducement to engage in investment activity that is communicated in the course of business'. The words 'invitation' or 'inducement' are not defined in the glossary or under the corresponding s.21 of FSMA. Under the guidance at PERG 8.4.5G I'm not satisfied CMIM's 'dear Trustee' letter had the characteristics of an invitation, essentially because it seems other third parties had already invited Mr F to consider TRG as an investment. But at PERG 8.4.7G the FCA went on to say this about inducements, with my emphasis:

'An inducement may be described as a link in a chain where the chain is intended to lead ultimately to an agreement to engage in investment activity. But this does not mean that all the links in the chain will be an inducement or that every inducement will be one to engage in investment activity. Only those that are a significant step in persuading or inciting or seeking to persuade or incite a recipient to engage in investment activity will be inducements under s.21.'

I appreciate CMIM is arguing that Mr F had already decided to invest in TRG and says the 'dear Trustee' letter would not have been pivotal in his thinking. Here, I don't think this is relevant to what CMIM's intent was, as highlighted above. The FCA clarified this further at PERG 8.4.4G, again with my emphasis:

'The FCA considers that it is appropriate to apply an objective test to decide whether a communication is an invitation or an inducement. In the FCA's view, the essential elements of an invitation or an inducement under section 21 are that it must both have the purpose or intent of leading a person to engage in investment activity and be promotional in nature. So it must seek, on its face, to persuade or incite the recipient to engage in investment activity. The objective test may be summarised as follows. Would a reasonable observer, taking account of all the circumstances at the time the communication was made:

- (1) consider that the communicator intended the communication to persuade or incite the recipient to engage in investment activity or that that was its purpose; and*
- (2) regard the communication as seeking to persuade or incite the recipient to engage in investment activity.'*

It's clear that the 'dear Trustee' letter was intended to lead trustees to making an investment. A reasonable conclusion to be drawn was that only trustees who were cautious and/or needed short-term access to the money shouldn't invest. And I think CMIM would have known this was an unlikely conclusion for most of the recipients – and I count Mr F in that category – to draw. I say this in the context of:

- the advice being given on a pension, which is typically held for the long-term: here Mr F was accessing his tax-free cash but could potentially have left the other funds in place for some time yet;
- CMIM suggesting it was possible to mitigate the risks of TRG by diversifying: it recommended a DFM portfolio (albeit that here Mr F had separated out the tax-free cash which he was not going to invest instead);
- no indication being given to the trustee to understand whether they met this 'cautious' definition.

In relation to the final point, CMIM says that was why it encouraged Mr F to take his own regulated advice. In my view that doesn't explain why it set out its letter in a way that allowed him to infer that he could go ahead without that advice if he wasn't cautious or needing short-term access to funds. I also don't think it's a coincidence that the 'dear Trustee' letter was written in this way: CMIM stood to gain business from being able to provide DFM services, if a trustee went ahead with the TRG part of the investment.

It would have been apparent to CMIM at the time that third parties had quite a lot of influence over what the trustees did; this is the basis of much of its arguments now. So, it was unlikely to receive the DFM business if its advice tended to discourage the investment in TRG. I think that, given this clear intention, CMIM's 'dear Trustee' letter was a 'significant step' in persuading Mr F to make the investment. CGL expected Mr F to sign an instruction declaring that he had regard for it in making his investment decision. If CMIM didn't realise this is what would follow, then it should have done - given it said it was giving its advice for the purposes of PA'95.

Whether or not (in CMIM's view) Mr F was simply signing where a third party told him shouldn't have diminished that this was a highly significant step. It made CMIM's advice an inducement that meant it was promoting the investment. CMIM seems to have taken the view that both YCP and CGL were inducing Mr F to invest because of vested interests, yet it was not. That simply doesn't stand up to scrutiny.

My view that this was a promotion is underlined by the fact that on 1 January 2014 FCA revised the list of exemptions at COBS 4.12.4R to clarify that 'a personal recommendation on a non-mainstream pooled investment' could, as a promotion, qualify for an exemption in certain circumstances. This demonstrates advising on (and not just personally recommending) an investment can also amount to a promotion: the very nature of promotion means that it does not have to be targeted to a specific individual. And that's what happened here: CMIM promoted and advised on the investment (even though YCP may also have promoted it originally, and even though CMIM didn't make a personal recommendation).

Did Mr F qualify for a relevant exemption from the restrictions on UCIS promotion?

Mr F is unlikely to have qualified under the criteria set out in the FSMA (Promotion of Collective Investment Schemes) (Exemptions) Order 2001, because he didn't appear to be a high net worth or sophisticated investor. This was not established at the time by CMIM (as required under the regulations) and has not been suggested since.

Mr F didn't issue his investment instruction referring to CMIM's advice until August 2014, but I don't think that necessarily means he'd only recently received the dear Trustee letter. That may have been due to the delay in Sun Life sending over the funds. So I think it's possible the dear Trustee letter was sent to him before or after 1 January 2014 – when the list of exemptions at COBS 4.12.1R changed - but in all likelihood before the transfer was made.

If it was before 1 January 2014, the only other relevant COBS exemption was a Category 2 person, being both someone:

- for whom the firm has taken reasonable steps to ensure that investment in the collective investment scheme is suitable; and
- who is an 'established' or 'newly accepted' client of the firm or of a person in the same group as the firm

Mr F was not an established client of CMIM, and explanatory notes confirm that a newly accepted client required a written agreement relating to designated investment business (i.e. activities which were regulated by the FCA). His agreement with CMIM specifically excluded such regulated activities, so he could not have met the definition of a newly accepted client.

If it was after 1 January 2014, the new exemption for 'solicited advice' only allowed a promotion where the communication met all of the following requirements:

- (a) the communication only amounts to a financial promotion because it is a personal recommendation on a non-mainstream pooled investment;*
- (b) the personal recommendation is made following a specific request by that client for advice on the merits of investing in the non-mainstream pooled investment; and*
- (c) the client has not previously received a financial promotion or any other communication from the firm (or from a person connected to the firm) which is intended to influence the client in relation to that non-mainstream pooled investment. [See Note 3.]*

Note 3 essentially said that anyone with a business relationship with the firm including an introducer or appointed representative, is 'connected' to it. So it's clear that YCP's introducer agreement with CMIM would always have made this exclusion unavailable too. And I also can't see that any of the other, unaltered, exemptions were available under COBS 4.12.1R – not least because Mr F doesn't appear to have been a high net worth or sophisticated investor and didn't have any of the other professions or roles specified.

The only reasonable conclusion I can therefore draw from this is that CMIM unlawfully promoted the TRG investment to Mr F, in contravention of s.238 of FSMA. Moreover it ought reasonably to have been aware that other parties who promoted the investment to Mr F previously were likely also in contravention of FSMA – because they were themselves unregulated and/or couldn't rely on a valid exemption either.

CMIM's position that Mr F paid no attention to or was misled by the 'dear Trustee' letter

CMIM believes CGL's reference to the 'dear Trustee' letter was intentionally misleading, as it encouraged Mr F to confirm that he believed CMIM to be an 'appropriately qualified adviser' for the purposes of PA'95 – meaning that in effect Mr F thought he'd received 'suitability advice'. I don't find this misleading to the extent that it would materially alter CMIM's culpability, as this pre-supposes that Mr F would have understood the difference between 'advice' and 'suitability advice'.

Mr F was a lay-trustee, which CMIM knew, and unsophisticated in financial matters. So I think he the most he would have reasonably understood was that he was getting an appropriately qualified opinion on whether he should include TRG in his SSAS (or in layman's terms and as implied by s.36 of PA'95, its 'suitability' for his SSAS). I can't see that Mr F was misled if CMIM now considers it wasn't appropriately qualified to give that advice. And at a fundamental level, I don't think Mr F's inclination (or otherwise) to read the 'dear Trustee' letter materially alters the outcome because, as I've set out above:

- Whether something counts as an inducement depends in part on how it would be received by a reasonable person; not necessarily someone (Mr F) that CMIM considers wasn't inclined to read the letter.
- Whether it was also a significant step in securing the investment is largely answered by the fact CGL required Mr F to take this advice, irrespective of the level of attention he paid to it.
- So, it's plainly wrong to say that this letter 'might just as well have not existed', as the investment in my view was promoted unlawfully - and that fundamentally affects the outcome of the complaint.

CMIM says its name was used to give the arrangements an 'air of credibility'. But in my view it should have gone into this with its eyes open. It attended meetings with the other parties involved where a whole sales and marketing strategy was apparently discussed to attract new clients to invest in TRG. Yet it now says it should have been obvious to CGL that those clients were wholly inappropriate candidates for SSASs. These arguments actually serve to demonstrate very well why CMIM shouldn't have got involved in inducing Mr F's investment into TRG at all. It knew that none of the other parties in the transaction were regulated by the FCA and it could not, as a result, expect them to share its duty of care to clients.

What should CMIM have done instead?

It's difficult to see how it was possible for advice that was stated in the terms of business to enable a trustee to make investment decisions for his SSAS under s.36 of PA'95 not to be personalised to that trustee. PA'95 itself makes references to suitability and diversification, and says other regulations may specify further criteria. Owing to its small size, most of the regulations in the secondary Occupational Pension Schemes (Investment) Regulations 2005 don't cover Mr F's SSAS. But regulation 7 does, and this states that:

'...the trustees of the scheme in exercising their powers of investment, and any fund manager to whom any discretion has been delegated under section 34 of the 1995 Act in exercising the discretion, must have regard to the need for diversification of investments, in so far as appropriate to the circumstances of the scheme.'

This precise wording was reflected in the investment instruction CGL required Mr F to sign. I can't fairly say it was possible for him to obtain advice on whether TRG was suitable, and provided adequate diversification for the circumstances of his SSAS, without a recommendation specifically in respect of the requirements and objectives of that SSAS.

CMIM was bound by COBS 2.1.1R (the client's best interests rule) and COBS 4.2.1R (ensuring a communication or a financial promotion is fair, clear and not misleading). These COBS rules were not part of chapter 9 (suitability) and still applied if CMIM was 'advising on investments'. It was also bound by the following FCA Principles, to:

- conduct its business with due skill, care and diligence (Principle 2);
- take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems (Principle 3);
- pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly (Principle 6);
- take reasonable care to ensure the suitability of its advice and discretionary decisions for any customer who is entitled to rely upon its judgment (Principle 9).

I have significant concerns about an arrangement CMIM entered into that effectively meant it could only track who the end recipients of its 'dear Trustee' letter were if its introducer passed it a signed copy of its terms of business, or it later learned the client signed up for its DFM service (which didn't happen in this case). That calls into question whether CMIM was adhering to Principle 3. I also think Principle 9 is particularly apt here, as it refers to the care CMIM should take in formulating advice (whether that's a personal recommendation or not).

In observance of these principles and rules and the articulated s.36 purpose of its advice, I think there were only really two routes CMIM could reasonably take:

1. Decline to get involved in the introducer-adviser relationship with YCP, and therefore come into contact with clients like Mr F at all; or
2. Agree to accept introductions from YCP, but proceed on a basis which was fundamentally different in a number of respects in order to ensure that it was complying with the principles and rules:
 - Take reasonable care to make a personal recommendation to Mr F, which was tailored to his specific circumstances and thus was more likely to pay due regard to his best interests and treat him fairly.
 - Note that if the recommendation was not to invest in TRG, this would not amount to promotion and so the restrictions on promotion wouldn't be breached.
 - Ensure it issued that recommendation to Mr F directly, rather than supplying it via third parties (where there was potentially some doubt whether it would reach Mr F, if the advice didn't give a favourable impression of investing).

I've carefully considered what the possible consequences of CMIM taking either of these two routes might have been. Clearly no third party could make CMIM give advice that was in favour of investing in TRG. So if CMIM declined to get involved or indicated it would make direct recommendations against investing, I accept it's possible that those parties would have looked to tie up with a different adviser hoping to get a more favourable outcome. However the wording of PA'95 meant that the 'proper advice' Mr F was required to take couldn't just be given by any adviser. s.36 states:

'For the purposes of this section "proper advice" means—

- (a) if the giving of the advice constitutes the carrying on, in the United Kingdom, of a regulated activity (within the meaning of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000), advice given by a person who may give it without contravening the prohibition imposed by section 19 of that Act (prohibition on carrying on regulated activities unless authorised or exempt);*
- (b) in any other case, the advice of a person who is reasonably believed by the trustees to be qualified by his ability in and practical experience of financial matters and to have the appropriate knowledge and experience of the management of the investments of trust schemes'*

Whether or not the other parties realised that any advice on TRG was a regulated activity, it wasn't surprising that typically the relevant knowledge and experience to give that advice was more likely to be found amongst regulated firms. And I would also expect any regulated adviser to be as mindful of the FCA's principles and rules as CMIM should have been. So they too should have considered the position on promotion; whether a personal recommendation would be expected; and the consequences giving advice in favour of investing that couldn't be supported by a valid exemption.

I've also taken into account that CMIM had the option to refuse to get involved in advising Mr F at all, but it chose to give advice. So, I think it's fair and reasonable that CMIM is held to the standard of the proper personal recommendation that it should have given to Mr F to satisfy the regulator's expectations and those reasonably implied by PA'95.

What would have happened if CMIM gave suitable advice?

As a regulated firm with permission to advise on investments, I'm satisfied CMIM should have been aware of the regulator's views on UCIS and other non-mainstream investments. It ought to have known that any investment in UCIS taking up a significant portion of a SSAS was plainly unsuitable for an inexperienced investor or one without a high attitude to risk.

It should have been reasonably apparent that with his low capacity for loss, Mr F could ill afford even to invest 50% of his SSAS in TRG as per the dear Trustee letter. In my view Mr F is unlikely to have had the experience to appreciate this for himself - and that's important because when increasing his holding to 100%, I think Mr F had been misled as to the extent that TRG was appropriate for him at all.

There was nothing about TRG in particular – being an off-plan, offshore property development subject to a variety of currency, counterparty, construction and occupancy risks – to counter the presumption of unsuitability for someone in Mr F's circumstances. It's evident that the whole reason for the SSAS being introduced to Mr F by other parties was in order to invest in TRG. So I need to consider how Mr F would have acted, if CMIM had made a proper personal recommendation that didn't involve TRG.

I find it unlikely that the other parties involved would have been interested in him proceeding to transfer to the SSAS if that didn't entail a TRG investment. To secure that investment they needed advice in favour of it to fulfil Mr F's PA'95 obligations, and as I said above I think it's reasonable to conclude that other regulated firms should also have advised against TRG.

CGL told this service the advice wouldn't necessarily need to come from a regulated adviser, but I'm mindful that an unauthorised firm recommending a collective investment scheme would be committing an actionable offence under FSMA. That would in my view make such a firm difficult to find, and their advice would in any event carry less credibility. It would also have played further into the checks Sun Life was likely carrying out (hence the delay) to mitigate against pension liberation/scams.

As CMIM itself realises, its name was brought on board to 'legitimise' the proposed investment in TRG. But CMIM's advice should have far from legitimised the investment. It should have made very clear that it was unsuitable for him. Once that opinion had been given I can't safely say it could easily have been 'undone' by any attempts to refer Mr F to other advisers, such that he would then have still been prepared to invest in TRG after all.

I've taken into account that Mr F concedes he was looking to do something else with his pension. I'm satisfied the more likely outcome is that Mr F would have had second thoughts about transferring to the CGL SSAS - or at least sought alternative advice on how to invest within the SSAS (or his existing Sun Life plan). It was not too late for him to abort the transfer altogether if he ultimately decided to do that.

Should I only apportion part of Mr F's losses to CMIM?

CMIM says that CGL was 'reckless and negligent' given its professed level of experience. I understand the argument that it should have been apparent to CGL that the 'dear Trustee' letter couldn't satisfy the requirements (which it identified itself) of PA'95. I didn't know whether Mr F intends to complain about CGL's actions as administrator, but occupational schemes aren't within the Financial Ombudsman Service's jurisdiction. In any case there is a higher bar against financial advisers, and this is reflected in the way they are regulated and rules they must follow. So it's also understandable that Mr F has chosen to bring this complaint to us.

CMIM also says that Mr F's own responsibilities as a trustee should be taken into account, but a trustee is just as entitled to appropriate advice as any consumer of financial services. CMIM was providing FCA-regulated advice to Mr F as the sole lay-trustee and, equally, had an opportunity to check for itself what the requirements of PA'95 were. If it couldn't do that, it shouldn't have given the advice. I can't see a basis here on which it would be fair or reasonable for me allow CMIM to avoid the consequences of its own failings, even in part.

I agree that if I were satisfied that Mr F would have chosen to invest in TRG 'come what may', it wouldn't be fair for me apportion any responsibility for compensating him to CMIM. It's not that principle that is in dispute. Rather it is whether I can, in fact, fairly say that on the balance of probabilities Mr F would still have gone ahead with investing in TRG, had CMIM treated him fairly.

I think it's likely Mr F would have heeded the proper advice he was told he would get, and was entitled to expect, from CMIM. I'm persuaded on the balance of probabilities that he would have invested differently: either within the SSAS, his existing Sun Life plan or an alternative arrangement. We look at each complaint on its own merits – so if an investigator has taken a different view on causation on another complaint, then either party may refer that view to an ombudsman. I may not have agreed with that view.

Putting things right

My aim in awarding fair compensation is to put Mr F in the position he would have been in, had he made alternative investments to TRG that were appropriate for his attitude to risk - which his CMC claims was low. Neither Mr F nor the CMC has disputed the investigator's view that an appropriate benchmark for this would be a 50% portion in the FTSE UK Private Investors Income Index on a Total Return basis and a 50% portion in line with the average return from fixed rate bonds. On the facts of this case, I agree with that view.

Central Markets Investment Management Limited must therefore calculate a fair value for the funds Mr F originally transferred to the SSAS as at the date of my final decision, as if they had increased in value in line with this benchmark - and the same amount of tax-free cash as on the CGL statements was taken. (CMIM may wish to check that no further income payments have been made as their gross value will also need to be accounted for.)

The FTSE UK Private Investors Income total return index is made up of a range of indices with different asset classes, mainly UK equities and government bonds. It's a fair measure for someone who was prepared to take some risk to get a higher return. The average rate for the fixed rate bonds would be a fair measure for someone who wanted to achieve a reasonable return without risk to his capital. I consider that Mr F's risk profile was in between, in the sense that he was prepared to take a small level of risk to attain his investment objectives. So, the 50/50 combination would reasonably put him into that position.

It doesn't mean that Mr F would have made investments that exactly mirrored the return on this benchmark. For that reason CMIM shouldn't be deducting investment costs or other charges from the benchmark. The view I'm taking here is that the sort of funds Mr F would have chosen would typically have performed broadly in line with this benchmark; notwithstanding the charges (which would not necessarily even have been those of the SSAS, if he'd switched within Sun Life or chosen a cheaper arrangement). It is a proxy that is being used for the purposes of compensation.

The actual value of Mr F's CGL SSAS as at the date of my final decision should be deducted from this fair value to arrive at Mr F's initial loss amount. (Any currently outstanding administration charges yet to be applied to the CGL SSAS should be removed from the actual value first.)

The actual value is difficult to determine where an investment is illiquid (meaning it cannot be readily sold on the open market). That appears to be the case with the TRG holding in the CGL SSAS. Therefore as part of calculating compensation:

- CMIM should agree an amount with CGL SSAS as a commercial value for this investment, then pay the sum agreed to CGL SSAS plus any costs, and take ownership of the investment. The actual value used in the calculations should include anything CMIM has paid to the SSAS. The fractional ownership company through membership of which Mr F holds the TRG investment should be consulted to achieve this.
- Alternatively, if CMIM is unable to buy the TRG investment from the CGL SSAS it should value it as nil, as part of determining the actual value. It's also fair that Mr F should not be disadvantaged while he is unable to close down the CGL SSAS and move to a potentially cheaper and more strongly regulated arrangement. Third parties are involved and we don't have the power to tell them what to do. So to provide certainty to all parties I think it's fair that CMIM adds five years' worth of future SSAS administration fees at the current tariff to the initial loss amount, to allow a reasonable period of time for the CGL SSAS to be closed.

CMIM has suggested to this service that it may be able to use independent valuers for the TRG investment, or agree a value with CGL (which is more than nil value), even if it's not actually buying the investment from the SSAS.

As there appears to be no market for the investment I don't consider it's fair to use a value that is the opinion of someone who is not actually buying the investment from the SSAS. I also cannot anticipate whether TRG will be permitting changes of ownership because clearly legal processes would be involved. But to the extent that this is possible, CMIM will have benefited from the value it thinks is in the investment by buying it out of the SSAS.

However, if CMIM is unable to take ownership of the investment, it may ask Mr F instead to provide an undertaking in return, to account to it for the net amount of any payment he may receive from the investment in future. The aim of this undertaking is to avoid double-recovery of Mr F's losses. If CMIM wishes to do this the undertaking should be drawn up after compensation is paid – and CMIM will need to meet any associated costs. It is not my role to set the terms of the assignment and undertaking, but rather to explain its aim in achieving overall fairness for both parties. If CMIM asks Mr F to provide this undertaking, payment of the compensation awarded may be made dependent upon provision of that undertaking.

Payment of compensation

If there is an overall loss, CMIM should pay into the CGL SSAS, to increase its value by the amount of the initial loss amount. The payment should allow for the effect of charges and any available tax relief. CMIM shouldn't pay into the CGL SSAS if this will conflict with any tax protections or allowances.

If CMIM is unable to pay the compensation into the CGL SSAS, it should make payment direct to Mr F. But had it been possible to add a sum into the CGL SSAS, it would have provided a taxable income. Therefore the initial loss amount should be reduced to notionally allow for any income tax that would otherwise have been paid.

The notional allowance should be calculated using Mr F's actual or expected marginal rate of tax at his selected retirement age. Here, it's reasonable to assume that Mr F is likely to be a basic rate taxpayer at the selected retirement age, so the reduction would equal 20%.

CMIM must also pay Mr F £300 for distress and inconvenience in view of the disruption caused to his retirement planning.

Details of the calculation must be provided to Mr F in a clear, simple format.

In all of the circumstances above I think it's fair and reasonable for me to hold CMIM responsible for 100% of Mr F's loss. It's a matter for CMIM whether it wishes to attempt to recover any of the compensation I'm requiring it to pay from other parties. It may take an assignment of Mr F's rights to pursue those parties as a further part of the above-mentioned undertaking, if it wishes to do so.

My final decision

I uphold Mr F's complaint and require Central Markets Investment Management Limited to pay him compensation as set out in the 'Putting things right' section above. If Mr F accepts this decision and compensation is not paid within 28 days of CMIM being notified of his acceptance, interest must be added to my award at the rate of 8% per year simple from the date of the final decision to the date of payment.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mr F to accept or reject my decision before 27 July 2022.
