The complaint

Mr P complains that Novia Financial Plc ("Novia") was negligent when it allowed him to transfer his existing pension to a Self-Invested Personal Pension ("SIPP") and invest in a number of non-standard investments.

Mr P was being represented in the complaint by a claims management company but he is now dealing with this matter himself. For ease, I'll refer to all representations as being made by Mr P.

What happened

Involved parties

Novia

Novia is a regulated pension provider and administrator. It's been authorised by the regulator – the Financial Conduct Authority ('FCA') - since 16 September 2008.

Blue Ocean Financial Services Limited ("Blue Ocean")

At the time of the events in this complaint, Blue Ocean was authorised by the FCA. This authorisation ceased in 2016 and Blue Ocean has since been declared in default by the Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS)

Hypa Management LLP ("Hypa")

Hypa was the provider of a number of unregulated investments. In the case of Mr P, he invested in the following bonds:

- Biomass Investments Plc ("Biomass") – this was an unregulated 3 year bond offering investors a 12.5% return. An Investment Review Simplified document completed for Novia by a third party firm, dated 2 July 2015, stated that "This investment may be deemed to be a non-mainstream pooled investment by the FCA" and that "The investment is restricted to sophisticated or high net worth investors".
- Lakeview UK Investments Plc ("Lakeview") – this was an unregulated 5 year bond offering investors an 11.5% return. An Investment Review Simplified document, completed for Novia by a third party firm, dated 1 July 2015, stated that "This investment may be deemed to be a non-mainstream pooled investment by the FCA" and that "The investment is restricted to sophisticated or high net worth investors".
- Strategic Residential Developments Plc – ("Strategic Residential") this was an unregulated 5 year bond offering investors an 11% return.
- Real Estate Investments USA PLC ("Real Estate") - this was an unregulated five year bond offering investors an 15% return. An Investment Review Simplified document, completed for Novia by a third party firm, dated 5 August 2013, stated that:

> "The structure utilised by the Bond Issuer is such that the Bonds may be deemed by the FCA to be a non-mainstream pooled investment once policy statement PS 03/13 is implemented in January 2014. This may therefore have a restriction on to whom this investment may be marketed to.

We suggest that SIPP Operators consider requesting that the investment be subjected to a detailed review by SIPP Investment Platform, rather than using this simplified review."

Product literature for each of the above bonds contained the following risk warning:

> "It is not anticipated that there will be an active secondary market for the Bonds and it is not expected that such a market will develop as the Bonds are non-transferable. In addition, there are limitations on transfers and Bonds are only redeemable under limited circumstances as set out in this Offering Memorandum. Investment in the Bonds is therefore relatively illiquid and involves a high degree of risk."

The transaction

Mr P believes he was cold called by Blue Ocean in 2015. At the time, Mr P held an existing defined contribution (DC) pension plan. Mr P was advised by Blue Ocean to transfer his existing pension, worth a little over £100,000, to a SIPP with Novia. Novia received the funds in June 2015 and the following Hypa investments were made:

- Biomass - £12,000
- Lakeview - £12,000
- Strategic Residential - £12,000
- Real Estate - £12,000

The remaining funds in Mr P's SIPP were invested with two different discretionary fund managers ("DFMs").

Mr P has told this Service that at the time of advice, he was told by Blue Ocean that he would receive more money and it would be better and safer to transfer his existing pension to the SIPP. He says if he hadn't been cold called by Blue Ocean his pension would still be with his previous pension provider.

Additional background information

Novia has provided a copy of its 'Terms of Business for Firms' document. And when asked about the due diligence it carried out on Blue Ocean, Novia has told us that:

- Blue Ocean accepted Novia's terms of business and signed an Adviser application form in March 2014.
- Novia only accepts business from FCA authorised financial advisers. Its due diligence confirms the adviser's regulatory status before it accepts the adviser's business. It subscribes to the FCA register data service which validates the adviser firm's continuing authorisation status.
- The end of Blue Ocean's FCA authorisation led to the end of Novia's Terms of Business with Blue Ocean in 2016.
- Novia wasn't expected to understand an introducer's business model because the introducer, in this case Blue Ocean, was an FCA regulated financial adviser and was therefore expected to manage its business in accordance with FCA principles and rules.
- Novia can rely upon other regulated businesses and it doesn't have to understand how they fulfil their regulatory obligations.

- As an advised platform business, Novia expects the financial adviser to have provided advice in relation to all new business instructions to Novia.
- Investment decisions are solely the responsibility of the advising firm and they can recommend suitable investments from the broad range of investments Novia makes available to support a wide range of customer investment objectives.
- Novia is not responsible for the suitability of the advice and therefore it has no requirement to request copies of suitability reports/pension transfer reports.
- Novia is not required to audit or monitor the actions of other FCA authorised firms and the FCA rules permit firms to rely upon the actions of other regulated businesses.
- Blue Ocean introduced 631 clients to Novia.
- Mr P was the 419th introduction.
- Just over 51% of clients introduced by Blue Ocean invested in Non-Mainstream Investments ("NSIs").

When asked about the due diligence it completed on the investments held within Mr P's SIPP. Novia has told us that:

- Novia's investment committee ensures that it conducts effective and appropriate due diligence checks on all investments on its platform taking into account its proposition (advised clients only) and a broad range of client types.
- It takes reasonable steps to ensure that all assets are genuine, and not part of a fraud or scam. If it believed an investment would be detrimental to customers, then it would not allow it onto the platform.
- It only makes investments available through it service to FCA authorised financial advisers. It remains the adviser's responsibility to recommend suitable investments from all those available.
- The due diligence is specific to each product but follows the same process. That is to:
    - obtain and review the legal documentation from the investment manager
    - obtain an independent report into the investment, as this may identify information about the investment that is not known to Novia
    - assessment of the individuals connected to the investment taking account of any financial or other irregularities from information available in the public domain
    - consideration of possible investment security arrangements and operational requirements.
- Novia would not ask the client to sign any risk warnings. The FCA financial adviser is responsible for recommending suitable investments to the client taking account of their investment objectives and attitude to risk. Novia reminds financial advisers of the important consideration for certain investments and Non-Standard Investments are included in this cohort. Novia provided a copy of a notice that was displayed to financial advisers before they were able to access these investments.

Mr P's complaint

In 2018, Mr P submitted a claim to the FSCS against Blue Ocean. He received £50,000 compensation which was the maximum award he could receive under the FSCS's award limits at that time. However, this didn't cover the full extend of his loss. So the FSCS gave Mr P a reassignment of rights in which, amongst other things, the FSCS explained it was transferring back to Mr P any legal rights it held against Novia.

Mr P complained to Novia in 2021. He complained that, amongst other things, Novia had acted unfairly when accepting his SIPP application. And that it had failed to carry out sufficient due diligence on a number of NSIs his SIPP went on to invest in.

Novia rejected the complaint so Mr P referred the matter to this Service for consideration.

One of our Investigators reviewed Mr P's complaint and thought it should be upheld. Mr P accepted the Investigator's findings but Novia didn't respond at that time.

More recently, Novia accepted that it failed to carry out sufficient due diligence on a number of NSIs held within its SIPPs, including those held in Mr P's SIPP.

Novia made an offer to Mr P in settlement of his complaint. Mr P didn't accept the offer and so, as the complaint remains unresolved, it's been passed to me to reach a final decision.

What I've decided – and why

I've considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what's fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

Having done so, I uphold the complaint. I've explained my reasons for this below and I've set out what I think Novia needs to do to put things right.

Relevant considerations

I'm required to determine this complaint by reference to what I consider to be fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case. When considering what is fair and reasonable in the circumstances, I need to take account of relevant law and regulations, regulator's rules, guidance and standards, codes of practice and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time.
I have taken into account a number of considerations including, but not limited to:

- The Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 ("FSMA").

- Court decisions relating to SIPP operators, in particular Options UK Personal Pensions LLP v Financial Ombudsman Service Limited [2024] EWCA Civ 541 ("Options") and the case law referred to in it including:

    - Adams v Options UK Personal Pensions LLP [2021] EWCA Civ 474 ("Adams")
    - R (Berkeley Burke SIPP Administration) v Financial Ombudsman Service EWHC 2878 ("Berkeley Burke")
    - Adams v Options SIPP UK LLP [2020] EWHC 1229 (Ch) ("Adams – High Court")

- The Financial Conduct Authority ("FCA") (previously Financial Services Authority) ("FSA") rules including the following:

    - PRIN Principles for Business
    - COBS Conduct of Business Sourcebook
    - DISP Dispute Resolution Complaints

- Various regulatory publications relating to SIPP operators and good industry practice.

The legal background:

As highlighted in the High Court decision in Adams the factual context is the starting point for considering the obligations the parties were under. And in this case it is not disputed that the contractual relationship between Novia and Mr P is a non-advisory relationship.
Setting up and operating a SIPP is an activity that is regulated under FSMA. And pensions are subject to HM Revenue and Customs rules. Novia was therefore subject to various obligations when offering and providing the service it agreed to provide – which in this case was a non-advisory service.

I have considered the obligations on Novia within the context of the non-advisory relationship agreed between the parties.

The case law:

I'm required to determine this complaint by reference to what is in my opinion fair and reasonable in all the circumstances. I am not required to determine the complaint in the same way as a court. A court considers a claim as defined in the formal pleadings and they will be based on legal causes of action. The Financial Ombudsman Service was set up with a wider scope which means complaints might be upheld, and compensation awarded, in circumstances where a court would not do the same.

The approach taken by the Financial Ombudsman Service in two similar (but not identical) complaints was challenged in judicial review proceedings in the Berkeley Burke and the Options cases. In both cases the approach taken by the ombudsman concerned was endorsed by the court. A number of different arguments have therefore been considered by the courts and may now reasonably be regarded as resolved.

It is not necessary for me to quote extensively from the various court decisions.

The Principles for Businesses:

The Principles for Businesses, which are set out in the FCA's Handbook "are a general statement of the fundamental obligations of firms under the regulatory system" (see PRIN 1.1.2G). The Principles apply even when the regulated firm provides its services on a non-advisory basis, in a way appropriate to that relationship.

Principles 2, 3 and 6 are of particular relevance here. They provide:

> "Principle 2 – Skill, care and diligence – A firm must conduct its business with due skill, care and diligence.
> Principle 3 – Management and control – A firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems.
> Principle 6 – Customers' interests – A firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly."

I am satisfied that I am required to take the Principles into account (see Berkley Burke) even though a breach of the Principles does not give rise to a claim for damages at law (see Options).

The regulatory publications and good industry practice:

The regulator issued a number of publications which reminded SIPP operators of their obligations, and which set out how they might achieve the outcomes envisaged by the Principles, namely:

- The 2009 and 2012 Thematic Review Reports.
- The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance.
- The July 2014 "Dear CEO" letter.

The 2009 Report included:

> We are concerned by a relatively widespread misunderstanding among SIPP operators that they bear little or no responsibility for the quality of the SIPP business that they administer, because advice is the responsibility of other parties, for example Independent Financial Advisers…
> We are very clear that SIPP operators, regardless of whether they provide advice, are bound by Principle 6 of the Principles for Businesses ('a firm must pay due regard to the interests of its clients and treat them fairly') insofar as they are obliged to ensure the fair treatment of their customers."

I have considered all of the above publications in their entirety. It is not necessary for me to quote more fully from the publications here.

The 2009 and 2012 Thematic Review Reports and the "Dear CEO" letter aren't formal guidance (whereas the 2013 finalised guidance is). However all of the publications provide a reminder that the Principles for Businesses apply and are an indication of the kinds of things a SIPP operator might do to ensure it is treating its customers fairly and produce the outcomes envisaged by the Principles. In that respect, the publications which set out the regulators' expectations of what SIPP operators should be doing also go some way to indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice, and I'm therefore satisfied it's appropriate to take them into account (as did the ombudsman whose decision was upheld by the court in the Berkeley Burke case).

Points to note about the SIPP publications include:

- The Principles on which the comments made in the publications are based have existed throughout the period covered by this complaint.
- The comments made in the publications apply to SIPP operators that provide a non-advisory service.
- Neither court in the Adams case considered the publications in the context of deciding what was fair and reasonable in all the circumstances. As already mentioned, the court has a different approach and was deciding different issues.
- What should be done by the SIPP operator to meet the regulatory obligations on it will always depend upon the circumstances.

Due diligence on the investment

Novia had a duty to conduct due diligence and give thought to whether an investment itself is acceptable for inclusion into a SIPP. That's consistent with the Principles and the regulators' publications as set out earlier in this decision. It's also consistent with HMRC rules that govern what investments can be held in a SIPP.

I accept that the Hypa investments don't appear to be fraudulent or a scam. But this doesn't mean that Novia did all the checks it needed to do. And, as I understand, Novia now accepts that it failed to carry out sufficient due diligence when allowing a number of NSIs, including the Hypa investments, in its SIPP.

Therefore, it's not necessary for me to reach a finding on this particular aspect.

Due diligence on Blue Ocean

Novia accepts that it shouldn't have allowed a number of NSIs, including the Hypa investments, to be held in its SIPPs. However, I've also considered whether it was appropriate for Novia to have accepted Mr P's business from Blue Ocean in the first place.

Novia has told us that it only accepted introductions from FCA authorised firms. And as an advised platform business it expected the financial adviser to have provided advice in relation to all new business instructions to it.

It has also said that typically it would meet with proposed advisers to understand their business, for example its systems and controls, and to see if the adviser would be a good 'fit' for Novia. Where appropriate, Novia would offer training to advisers. Only if deemed acceptable would advisers become approved on Novia's panel.

In the case of Blue Ocean, Novia hasn't been able to provide notes of any meetings that it says would have taken place between it and Blue Ocean before Novia accepted business from it. But it does appear to have carried out the following checks:

- Checking the FCA register to ensure that Blue Ocean was regulated and authorised to give financial advice.
- It asked Blue Ocean to accept its Terms of Business and for it to sign an 'Adviser Application Form'.

It's clear from the above that Novia understood that it needed to carry out some due diligence on Blue Ocean but I don't think these checks went far enough. And Novia's due diligence obligations were ongoing.

I think Novia was aware of, or should have identified potential risks of, consumer detriment associated with some business introduced by Blue Ocean, before it accepted Mr P's business, including that over half of the ordinary retail clients that it introduced were investing their SIPP funds in NSIs.

I think it's highly unusual for such a large proportion of a regulated advice firms' introductions to a SIPP provider to involve pension switches so as to invest in NSIs, and certainly in the case of Mr P, it was a significant proportion of his SIPP monies – almost 50%. I think it's fair to say that most advice firms don't transact this kind of business in significant volumes, certainly not for ordinary retail investors, like Mr P.

Novia ought to have had concerns about how Blue Ocean was able to introduce so many ordinary retail clients for investment in NSIs, whilst complying with the regulator's rules. Particularly in the absence of any information from Blue Ocean about the type of customers it dealt with, which could explain the pattern of high-risk business it was introducing.

I've not seen that Novia asked any further questions about any of this or asked for any documentary evidence of the process or checks that Blue Ocean agreed would be carried out.

Novia's Terms of Business required all clients to have received advice, prior to taking out a SIPP and investing. But it's told us that it didn't ask Blue Ocean for copies of the advice it was providing to the clients it was introducing to Novia – even though the Terms of Business Novia had agreed with Blue Ocean entitled it to do so. Therefore, I'm satisfied Novia couldn't be certain what advice Blue Ocean was offering to the clients it was introducing to Novia, or that Blue Ocean's advice model was in fact operating in line with Novia's assumptions.

I'd like to stress here that I'm not saying Novia should have checked any advice that was given – but it should have taken steps to ascertain if a reasonable process was in place and consumers were taking these steps on an informed basis. And, in order for Novia to meet its own regulatory obligations, it needed to satisfy itself that Blue Ocean was appropriate to deal with.

I've not been provided with any information or evidence to suggest that any additional due diligence was carried out on Blue Ocean. But even if it was, I think Novia still needed to ask further questions of Blue Ocean about the customers it was introducing through asking questions and through independent checks.

Mr P wasn't a sophisticated or high net-worth investor. And Novia didn't ask Blue Ocean when it introduced clients for investment in NSIs to confirm the investors' status. Mr P was the 419th client to be introduced to Novia by Blue Ocean and he invested almost 50% of his SIPP funds in Hypa investments, which as Novia now seems to accept were NSIs and were unsuitable for ordinary retail investors.

Novia didn't make appropriate checks of Blue Ocean's business model, either at the start of its relationship or on an ongoing basis. And it should have taken steps to address this risk of consumer detriment (or, given this risk, have simply declined to deal further with Blue Ocean).

Such steps should have involved getting a full understanding of Blue Ocean's business model prior to accepting business from it – through requesting information from Blue Ocean and through independent checks. I'm satisfied that such understanding would have revealed there was a significant risk of consumer detriment associated with some introductions of business from Blue Ocean.

If Blue Ocean had been unwilling to provide the required information, or fully answer the questions about its business model, Novia should have concluded it shouldn't accept introductions from Blue Ocean, where the intended investment was in NSIs.

Novia has said that it can rely upon other regulated businesses and it doesn't have to understand how they fulfil their regulatory obligations. And in the case of Blue Ocean, because it was an FCA regulated financial adviser, Novia says that it didn't need to understand its business model.

At the relevant date, COBS 2.4.6R (2) provided a general rule about reliance on others:

> "A firm will be taken to be in compliance with any rule in this sourcebook that requires it to obtain information to the extent it can show it was reasonable for it to rely on information provided to it in writing by another person."

And COBS 2.4.8G says:

> "It will generally be reasonable (in accordance with COBS 2.4.6R (2)) for a firm to rely on information provided to it in writing by an unconnected authorised person or a professional firm, unless it is aware or ought reasonably to be aware of any fact that would give reasonable grounds to question the accuracy of that information."

So, it would generally be reasonable for Novia to rely on information provided to it in writing by Blue Ocean, unless Novia was aware or ought reasonably to have been aware of any fact that would give reasonable grounds to question the accuracy of the information.

However, while checking Blue Ocean's regulatory status and its acceptance of Novia's Terms of Business go some way towards meeting Novia's regulatory obligations and good industry practice, I think Novia needed to do more in order to satisfy itself that it was fair and reasonable to accept introductions from Blue Ocean.

It's not reasonable to take so much comfort from a firm's regulated status that it is thought that no monitoring is called for because, for example, the firm is under a regulatory duty to treat its customers fairly. There had been, prior to the events in this case, examples of regulated firms fined for various forms of poor conduct where the regulated firms failed to act in their clients' best interest.

And it is an obvious point that rules alone are not enough. Relevant behaviour must be observed or monitored to ensure that only permitted behaviour occurs. I'm satisfied this can only be done through effective monitoring. And I'm satisfied this is the case even if the party being monitored is a regulated firm.

I've considered what Novia has said about FCA regulated financial advisers being expected to manage their business in accordance with FCA principles and rules. But, as I've explained above, I'm satisfied that Novia didn't comply with its regulatory obligations, good industry practice or treat Mr P fairly by failing to undertake adequate due diligence on Blue Ocean.

And I'm satisfied that had it undertaken adequate due diligence Novia ought reasonably to have been aware of facts that should have caused it to decline to accept Mr P's business from Blue Ocean. In other words, I'm satisfied that if Novia had undertaken adequate due diligence on Blue Ocean it ought to have been privy to information about Blue Ocean and the business it was introducing which didn't reconcile with what Novia says it was able to rely upon. And, in failing to take this step, I think it's fair and reasonable to conclude that Novia didn't act with due skill, care and diligence, organise and control its affairs responsibly, or treat Mr P fairly.

What checks should Novia have carried out?

The 2009 Thematic Review Report explained that the regulator would expect SIPP operators to have procedures and controls, and for management information to be gathered and analysed, so as to enable the identification of, amongst other things, "consumer detriment such as unsuitable SIPPs". Further, that this could then be addressed in an appropriate manner "…for example by contacting the members to confirm the position, or by contacting the firm giving advice and asking for clarification."

The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance gave an example of good practice as:

> "Understanding the nature of the introducers' work to establish the nature of the firm, what their business objectives are, the types of clients they deal with, the levels of business they conduct and expect to introduce, the types of investments they recommend and whether they use other SIPP operators. Being satisfied that they are appropriate to deal with."

I think that Novia, before accepting Mr P's business from Blue Ocean, should have checked with Blue Ocean about things like:

- how it came into contact with potential clients;
- what agreements it had in place with its clients;
- whether all of the clients it was introducing were being offered advice;
- how and why ordinary retail clients were interested in making these NSIs;
- what Blue Ocean was telling its clients about the NSIs.

In light of what I've said above, it would also have been fair and reasonable for Novia, to meet its regulatory obligations and good industry practice, to have taken independent steps to enhance its understanding of the introductions it was receiving from Blue Ocean. For example, it could have asked for copies of correspondence relating to the advice.

The 2009 Thematic Review Report said that:

"…we would expect (SIPP operators) to have procedures and controls, and to be gathering and analysing management information, enabling them to identify possible instances of financial crime and consumer detriment such as unsuitable SIPPs. Such instances could then be addressed in an appropriate way, for example by contacting the members to confirm the position, or by contacting the firm giving advice and asking for clarification."

So I think it would have been fair and reasonable for Novia to speak to some applicants, like Mr P, directly.

I accept Novia couldn't give advice. But it had to take reasonable steps to meet its regulatory obligations. And in my view such steps included addressing a potential risk of consumer detriment by speaking to applicants, as this could have provided Novia with further insight into Blue Ocean's business model. This would have been a fair and reasonable step to take in reaction to the clear and obvious risks of consumer detriment I've mentioned.

And, on balance, I think it's more likely than not that if Novia had contacted Mr P to 'confirm the position', Mr P would have told Novia that he had been contacted out of the blue by Blue Ocean and that Blue Ocean had told him the Hypa investments were safe and low risk.

Overall, I think if Novia had completed adequate due diligence it would have realised that some introductions from Blue Ocean, including Mr P's, carried a significant risk of consumer detriment. And I think that Novia ought to have had real concerns that Blue Ocean wasn't acting in customers' best interests and wasn't meeting its regulatory obligations.

Novia didn't act with due skill, care and diligence, organise and control its affairs responsibly, or treat Mr P fairly by accepting his business from Blue Ocean. To my mind, Novia didn't meet its regulatory obligations or good industry practice at the relevant time, and allowed Mr P to be put at significant risk of detriment as a result. Novia should have concluded that it shouldn't have accepted Mr P's business from Blue Ocean at all.

Is it fair to ask Novia to pay Mr P compensation in the circumstances?

I accept that Blue Ocean had some responsibility for initiating the course of action that led to Mr P's loss. However, I'm satisfied that it's also the case that if Novia had complied with its own distinct regulatory obligations as a non-advisory SIPP operator, the arrangement for Mr P wouldn't have come about in the first place and I don't think any of his pension monies would have been transferred to Novia or his SIPP wrappers established. I say this because Mr P has said that prior to being contacted by Blue Ocean, he'd not been considering making any changes to his pension arrangements.

Novia's failure to act in accordance with its regulatory obligations and good industry practice has caused Mr P to suffer financial loss in his pension and to suffer distress and inconvenience. I consider the loss of a significant proportion of his pension provision will inevitably have caused him considerable worry and upset.

Putting things right

I uphold this complaint. I consider Novia failed to comply with its own regulatory obligations and good industry practice in not refusing Mr P's SIPP business. My aim in awarding fair compensation will be to put Mr P back into the position he would likely have been in had it not been for Novia's failings.

As I've already mentioned above, had Novia carried out sufficient due diligence on the NSIs and Blue Ocean, I'm satisfied the investments would not have gone ahead and Mr P would have retained his existing pension plan.

In light of the above, Novia should calculate fair compensation by comparing the current position to the position Mr P would be in if he hadn't transferred his existing pension plan to the Novia SIPP. In summary, Novia should:

1. Obtain the current notional value, as at the date of the final decision, of Mr P's previous pension plan, if it hadn't been transferred to the SIPP.
2. Obtain the actual current value of Mr P's SIPP, as at the date of my final decision, less any outstanding charges.
3. Deduct the sum arrived at in step 2) from the sum arrived at in step 1).
4. Pay a commercial value to buy Mr P's share in any investments that cannot currently be redeemed.
5. Pay an amount into Mr P's SIPP, so that the transfer value of the SIPP is increased by an amount equal to the loss calculated in step 3). This payment should take account of any available tax relief and the effect of charges. The payment should also take account of interest as set out below.
6. Pay Mr P £500 for the distress and inconvenience the problems with his pension have caused him.

I've explained how Novia should carry out the calculation, set out in steps 1 - 6 above, in further detail below:

1. Obtain the current notional value, as at the date of this decision, of Mr P's previous pension plans, if they hadn't been transferred to the SIPP.

Novia should ask the operator of Mr P's previous pension plan to calculate the current notional value of Mr P's plan, as at the date of this decision, had he not transferred it into the SIPP. Novia must also ask the same operator to make a notional allowance in the calculations, so as to allow for any additional sums Mr P has contributed to, or withdrawn from, his Novia SIPP since the outset. To be clear this doesn't include SIPP charges or fees paid to third parties like an adviser.

Any notional contributions or notional withdrawals to be allowed for in the calculations should be deemed to have occurred on the date on which monies were actually credited to, or withdrawn from, the Novia SIPP by Mr P.

If there are any difficulties in obtaining a notional valuation from the operator of Mr P's previous pension plan, Novia should instead calculate a notional valuation by ascertaining what the monies transferred away from the plan would now be worth, as at the date of the final decision, had they achieved a return from the date of transfer equivalent to the FTSE UK Private Investors Income Total Return Index (prior to 01 March 2017, the FTSE WMA Stock Market Income total return index).

I'm satisfied that's a reasonable proxy for the type of return that could have been achieved over the period in question. And, again, there should be a notional allowance in this calculation for any additional sums Mr P has contributed to, or withdrawn from, his Novia SIPP since the outset.

I acknowledge that Mr P has received a sum of compensation from the FSCS, and that he has had the use of the monies received from the FSCS. The terms of Mr P's reassignment of rights require him to return compensation paid by the FSCS in the event this complaint is successful, and I understand that the FSCS will ordinarily enforce the terms of the assignment if required. So, I think it's fair and reasonable to make no permanent deduction in the redress calculation for the compensation Mr P received from the FSCS. And it will be for Mr P to make the arrangements to make any repayments he needs to make to the FSCS.

However, I do think it's fair and reasonable to allow for a temporary notional deduction equivalent to the payments Mr P actually received from the FSCS for a period of the calculation, so that the payments cease to accrue any return in the calculation during that period.

As such, if it wishes, Novia may make an allowance in the form of a notional deduction equivalent to the payments Mr P received from the FSCS following the claim about Blue Ocean the date the payments were actually paid to Mr P. Where such a deduction is made there must also be a corresponding notional addition at the date of my final decision equivalent to the FSCS payments notionally deducted earlier in the calculation.

To do this, Novia should ask the operator of Mr P's previous pension plan to allow for the relevant notional withdrawals in the manner specified above. The total notional deductions allowed for shouldn't equate to any more than the actual payments from the FSCS that Mr P received. Novia must also then allow for a corresponding notional addition as at the date of my final decision, equivalent to the accumulated FSCS payments notionally deducted by the operators of Mr P's previous pension plans.

Where there is any difficulty in obtaining a notional valuation from the previous operator, Novia can instead allow for both the notional withdrawal and contribution in the notional calculation it performs, provided it does so in accordance with the approach set out above.

2. Obtain the actual current value of Mr P's SIPP, as at the date of my final decision, less any outstanding charges.

This should be the current value as at the date of my final decision.

3. Deduct the sum arrived at in step 2) from the sum arrived at in step 1).

The total sum calculated in step 1) minus the sum arrived at in step 2), is the loss to Mr P's pension provision.

4. Pay a commercial value to buy Mr P's share in any investments that cannot currently be redeemed.

It isn't clear whether the NSIs have now been closed and removed from the SIPP or if the SIPP remains open.

But for any illiquid holdings that remain within Mr P's Novia SIPP, Mr P's monies could be transferred away from Novia. In order to ensure the SIPP could be closed and further Novia SIPP fees could be prevented I think it would be best if any illiquid assets held could be removed from the SIPP. Mr P would then be able to close the SIPP, if he wishes. That would then allow him to stop paying the fees for the SIPP. The valuation of the illiquid investments may prove difficult, as there is no market for them. For calculating compensation, Novia should establish an amount it's willing to accept for the investments as a commercial value. It should then pay the sum agreed plus any costs and take ownership of the investments.

If Novia is able to purchase the illiquid investments then the price paid to purchase the holdings will be allowed for in the current transfer value (because it will have been paid into the SIPP to secure the holdings).

If Novia is unable, or if there are any difficulties in buying Mr P's illiquid investments, it should give the holdings a nil value for the purposes of calculating compensation. In this instance Novia may ask Mr P to provide an undertaking to account to it for the net amount of any payment the SIPP may receive from the relevant holdings. That undertaking should allow for the effect of any tax and charges on the amount Mr P may receive from the investments and any eventual sums he would be able to access from the SIPP. Novia will have to meet the cost of drawing up any such undertaking.

5. Pay an amount into Mr P's SIPP, so that the transfer value of the SIPP is increased by an amount equal to the loss calculated in step 3). This payment should take account of any available tax relief and the effect of charges. The payment should also take account of interest as set out below.

If the redress calculation demonstrates a loss, the compensation should if possible be paid into Mr P's pension plan. The payment should allow for the effect of charges and any available tax relief. The compensation shouldn't be paid into the pension plan if it would conflict with any existing protection or allowance.

If a payment into the pension isn't possible or has protection or allowance implications, it should be paid directly to Mr P as a lump sum after making a notional deduction to allow for income tax that would otherwise have been paid. Typically, 25% of the loss could have been taken as tax-free cash and 75% would have been taxed according to his likely income tax rate in retirement – presumed to be 20%. So, making a notional deduction of 15% overall from the loss adequately reflects this.

If either party disagrees with the presumed income tax rate, they'll need to let us know when they respond to the provisional decision as the redress can't be changed once a final decision has been issued.

6. Pay Mr P £500 for the distress and inconvenience the problems with his pension have caused him.

In addition to the financial loss that Mr P has suffered as a result of the problems with his pension, I think that the loss suffered has caused him distress. And I think that it's fair for Novia to compensate him for this as well. I think £500 is a reasonable sum given that Novia's actions led to a significant loss to Mr P's pension, which will have been a great source of worry for him.

SIPP fees

If the investment can't be removed from the SIPP, and because of this it can't be closed after compensation has been paid, then it wouldn't be fair for Mr P to have to pay annual SIPP fees to keep the SIPP open. So, if the SIPP needs to be kept open only because of the illiquid investment and is used only or substantially to hold that asset, then any future SIPP fees should be waived until the SIPP can be closed.

Interest

The compensation resulting from this loss assessment must be paid to Mr P or into his SIPP within 28 days of the date Novia receives notification of Mr P's acceptance of my final decision. Interest must be added to the compensation amount at the rate of 8% per year simple from the date of my final decision to the date of settlement if the compensation isn't paid within 28 days.

My final decision

For the reasons explained above, I uphold this complaint and direct Novia Financial Plc to calculate and pay redress as set out above.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mr P to accept or reject my decision before 23 May 2025.
