

The complaint

Mrs W has a self-invested personal pension (SIPP) with Options UK Personal Pensions LLP (formerly) Carey Pensions UK LLP ("Options"). Mrs W's complaint is that Options accepted her application to open a SIPP and invest in an overseas property-based investment arrangement without first making adequate checks on the adviser, who she says was unregulated, and the investment which she says is high risk and unregulated.

What happened

Mrs W says in late 2011 she was contacted by a firm I will call the introducer. The introducer had previously recommended she transfer her existing pensions – including a defined benefit pension - to another provider's SIPP a few months before.

Mrs W was then told about a chance to invest in property in the Cayman Islands with Crown Acquisitions Worldwide Limited (Crown). She was told it was a great opportunity as the land could be purchased below market value and so high returns would be assured.

The introducer told Mrs W that her current scheme would be unsuitable for the property investment and so she was advised to open a SIPP with Options instead, in order to facilitate the investment with Crown. Mrs W agreed to the recommendation and transferred part of her pension funds to the Options SIPP to complete the Crown investment.

Mrs W lives in the UK. The introducer was regulated in Gibraltar and was authorised to carry on certain regulated business in the UK by the Financial Services Authority ("FSA") under a "MIFID passport" arrangement.

Mrs W applied for a SIPP with Options in November 2011. Some parts of the form were completed by hand, while most of it was completed in print. On that application form details of Mrs W's financial adviser were recorded (in print) as the introducer firm in Gibraltar.

Details of Mrs W's existing personal pension and its estimated transfer value were also included on the SIPP application form.

The SIPP was set up just before the end of the 2011 and Mrs W's funds - £46,500 - were transferred into the SIPP in January 2012. In or around February 2012, Mrs W will more likely than not have signed a document headed:

"SIPP MEMBER INSTRUCTION AND DECLARATION ALTERNATIVE INVESTMENT- CROWN ACQUISITIONS WORLDWIDE"

In that document Mrs W will have instructed Options to purchase land through Crown in the Cayman Islands for £45,000.

The form will have contained a number of declarations including that Mrs W:

- understood Options was acting on an execution only basis and was not giving any advice to her.

- was aware the investment was an “Unregulated ‘Alternative Investment’ and as such is considered High Risk and Speculative”.
- agreed the land would be sold prior to any residential development.
- agreed she had not and would not receive any form of inducement for making the investment.
- would indemnify Options against any claims made against it in connection with the investment.

I have not been provided with a copy of the above document, although it's more likely than not it would have been almost the same as those I've seen on other similar complaints that have been dealt with at this Service.

In February 2012, £45,000 was sent to Crown. The investment involved a plot of land in the Cayman Islands on which Crown had obtained planning permission to develop the property into a subdivision comprising various residential lots. Crown had arranged the preparation of plans for the construction of residential lots and agreed to obtain necessary approvals for those plans to develop the individual lots. Investors could buy individual lots and those bought via a SIPP were to be sold from the SIPP before any residential building work commenced.

In 2015 it's likely Options contacted Mrs W and informed her there was further legal work and costs to be paid to complete the investment and that it had obtained estimates for those costs from two law firms in the Cayman Islands.

As I understand it there were then further problems with the Crown project – though I have not been told all the details. In May 2017, Options wrote to investors with a report from lawyers relating to the problems with the investment. It was mentioned there was a court case being brought by a different SIPP operator against Crown. It suggested obtaining valuations for the property.

In 2018, Mrs W became aware of a considerable drop in the value of her investment and so she engaged the services of a Claims Management Company (CMC). In January 2019, Mrs W complained to Options with the help of her CMC. The CMC made a number of points on her behalf, including:

- Mrs W was advised by the introducer.
- The introducer was not authorised to give investment advice in the UK.
- Options should not have accepted business from the introducer. It should not have accepted Mrs W's application to open a SIPP and invest in the Crown investment.
- The investment is a fractional investment into a parcel of land in the Cayman Islands. And overseas investment in land to be developed was a high risk, speculative investment with no protection if it went wrong.
- The investment has failed and has become completely illiquid.
- Options had acted in breach of the various guidance issued by the regulator to SIPP operators.
- Options had acted in breach of s.27 Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA) in accepting business introduced to it in breach of the general prohibition.
- Options should compensate Mrs W for the losses she has suffered.

Options did not uphold the complaint. It made a number of points in response including:

- Options does not give advice. It acts on a non-advisory basis and is obliged to follow its clients' instructions.
- Mrs W was advised by the introducer, and it was authorised under an EEA passport to give advice. Mrs W's complaint should be against the introducer.

- Options was not authorised to advise on the suitability of the investment for Mrs W.
- Options carried out due diligence checks on the introducer. The introducer is based in Gibraltar where it is regulated. In any event Options is permitted to accept introductions from unregulated introducers.
- Mrs W signed the member declaration that acknowledged Options did not give advice, and that the investment was high risk and speculative.
- The guidance issued by the regulator, though helpful, is not the same as the rules and Options complied with the rules. Options gave other risk warnings also.
- Options was obliged under the rules to comply with Mrs W's instructions.
- Options is not responsible for ensuring the investment was suitable for Mrs W. It is not permitted to give such advice.
- Options did not breach s.27 FSMA because the introducer was an authorised firm and had the necessary permissions.

Mrs W referred her complaint to the Financial Ombudsman Service, and it was considered by one of our investigators. They thought the complaint should be upheld. The investigator made a number of points including:

- Options did not give advice and was not required to do so. It was still, however, under obligations as a non-advisory SIPP operator.
- Refusing to accept business does not amount to advice.
- The regulator has issued a number of publications which remind SIPP operators of their obligations.
- The introducer had an EEA passport to provide certain services in the UK. The passport covered investment advice, but it did not cover advice to transfer or switch pensions which required additional permissions which the introducer did not have.
- Options had explained on other cases that the introducer did not provide advice and only acted on an execution only basis.
- Options was aware that it was the introducer's intention to introduce non-advised clients to it in order to invest in Crown investments which are esoteric, high-risk investments. Options should have identified that such investments were unlikely to be suitable for most retail investors. And that only relatively small investments were likely to be suitable for sophisticated investors.
- The introducer's business model of introducing such investments to retail investors should have been a concern to Options and if it had acted fairly and reasonably it would not have accepted Mrs W's application. And if it had done so, Mrs W would not have suffered the losses she has suffered in her pension.

The investigator then went on to explain how they thought Options should put things right.

Options didn't agree with the investigator. It made a number of points in response, including the following:

- The ombudsman must take account of the legal and contractual context of the relationship between it and Mrs W. Options acts on a strictly execution only/non-advised basis and is member directed throughout.
- Options does not give advice and the ombudsman should not come to a finding that places on it a legal duty that does not exist.
- The investigator's findings are based on duties that would not be recognised by a court without explaining why that is appropriate.
- The complaint has been considered on the basis of guidance that had not been published at the time of events in this case.
- There is no evidence the introducer gave advice.

- Even if the introducer gave advice, it held the necessary permissions to do so. There was no pension transfer, as defined in the rules, in this case. This was a switch from one personal pension to another.
- In any event SIPP operators are permitted to accept introductions from non-regulated introducers.
- There was no reason why Options should not accept introductions of business from the introducer.
- There was no breach of duty by Options.
- Against this background it is unfair and unreasonable to place liability for the losses flowing from the investment on the execution-only SIPP operator. It is unfair to make a SIPP operator responsible for the member's poor investment choices.
- Options did not cause Mrs W to suffer a loss. It is likely Mrs W was keen to proceed with the investment and would have done so even if Options had not accepted business from the introducer.
- The redress methodology suggested by the investigator is unfair. The index proposed is higher than the approach used in other cases.
- Options request an oral hearing in order properly to determine Mrs W's complaint. It's procedurally unfair and inappropriate that a fact sensitive matter such as this should be decided wholly on the papers.

My Provisional Decision

In advance of this decision, I issued a provisional decision to the parties in which I said that I thought Mrs W's complaint was within our jurisdiction and that it should be upheld. Mrs W's representative accepted that decision, but made further comments regarding the notional tax deduction, which I will address in the redress section below. Options made no further submissions.

What I've decided – and why

I've considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what's fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

As the parties didn't make any further representations, other than in relation to Mrs W's tax status, I don't consider that I need to change the findings that I reached in my provisional decision. I have set these out below and adopt them as my findings in this final decision. I have decided that Mrs W's complaint is within our jurisdiction to consider and that it should be upheld.

In my provisional decision I said:

“Preliminary point – Time bar consideration

For the avoidance of doubt, I am considering our jurisdiction, and the other preliminary point below, on the basis of the applicable rules and law and not on the basis of what is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances.

Options has made a passing reference to this case perhaps being time-barred. Mrs W's complaint is made about events at the time of her SIPP application in November 2011 and her investment in February 2012. And Mrs W complained to Options over six years later in January 2019.

The Financial Ombudsman Service cannot deal with a complaint unless it is made within six years of the event complained of, or if later within three years of the time when the complainant was aware or ought reasonably to have been aware that they had cause for complaint.

In this case I am not satisfied Mrs W was aware or should reasonably have been aware she had cause for complaint against Options before January 2016 – being three years before her complaint. I am not aware of anything that ought to have made Mrs W aware there was a problem with her SIPP or the investment she made in it, that she had any reason to think she had suffered any loss or damage at that point and that if she had, that Options was or might be responsible.

Mrs W told us she first became concerned when the value of her investment dropped considerably in 2018, but there is nothing I have seen which would have made her aware she had cause to complain to Options about this. Mrs W does not seem to have had that awareness until 2019 and I cannot see any basis for saying she should reasonably have had that awareness earlier than she did.

I have therefore provisionally decided that this complaint wasn't made late.

Preliminary point - Options request for an oral hearing

Options says an oral hearing is necessary to explore issues such as how Mrs W came to hear about the investment and her understanding of the investment, the roles played by the parties, and Mrs W's motivation for entering into the transaction.

The Financial Ombudsman Service provides a scheme under which certain disputes may be resolved quickly and with minimum formality (s.225 FSMA). DISP 3.5.5R of the Financial Conduct Authority's ("FCA") Dispute Resolution rules provides the following:

"If the Ombudsman considers that the complaint can be fairly determined without convening a hearing, she will determine the complaint. If not, she will invite the parties to take part in a hearing. A hearing may be held by any means which the Ombudsman considers appropriate in the circumstances, including by telephone. No hearing will be held after the Ombudsman has determined the complaint."

Given my statutory duty under FSMA to resolve complaints quickly and with minimum formality, I am satisfied that it would not normally be necessary for me to hold a hearing in most cases (see the Court of Appeal's decision in R (Heather Moor & Edgecomb Ltd) v Financial Ombudsman Service [2008] EWCA Civ 642).

The key question for me to consider when deciding whether a hearing should be held is whether or not "the complaint, and whether or not it falls within our jurisdiction, can be fairly determined without convening a hearing".

We do not operate in the same way as the Courts. Unlike a Court, we have the power to carry out our own investigation. And the rules (DISP 3.5.8R) mean I, as the ombudsman determining this complaint, am able to decide the issues on which evidence is required and how that evidence should be presented. I am not restricted to oral cross-examination to further explore or test points.

If I decide particular information is required to decide a complaint fairly, in most circumstances we are able to request this information from either party to the complaint, or even from a third party.

I have considered the submissions Options has made. However, I am satisfied that I am able to fairly determine this complaint without convening a hearing. In this case, I am satisfied I have sufficient information to determine both the jurisdiction and the merits aspects of Mrs W's complaint. So, I do not consider a hearing is required.

The key question when considering our jurisdiction is whether Mrs W knew, or should reasonably have known, that she had cause for complaint against Options and when that was. And we have been able to test this to the extent we thought necessary by asking questions of Mrs W in writing and considering the evidence available to us. The key question when considering the merits of the complaint is whether Options should have accepted Mrs W's application at all. Mrs W's understanding of matters are secondary to this.

In any event – and I make this point only for completeness – even if I were to invite the parties to participate in a hearing, that would not be an opportunity for Options to cross-examine Mrs W as a witness. Our hearings do not follow the same format as a Court. We are inquisitorial in nature and not adversarial. And the purpose of any hearing would be solely for the ombudsman to obtain further information from the parties that they require in order to fairly determine the complaint. The parties would not usually be allowed direct questioning or cross-examination of the other party to the complaint.

I am provisionally satisfied that I have sufficient information to decide that the complaint has not been made late and that I have enough to determine whether it should be upheld. It is therefore not necessary for me to hold an oral hearing. I will now turn to considering the merits of Mrs W's complaint.

Relevant considerations

I'm required to determine this complaint by reference to what I consider to be fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case. When considering what is fair and reasonable, I am required to take into account: relevant law and regulations; regulators' rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time.

With that in mind I'll start by setting out what I have identified as the relevant considerations to deciding what is fair and reasonable in this case.

The Principles

In my view, the FCA's Principles for Businesses are of particular relevance to my decision. The Principles for Businesses, which are set out in the FCA's handbook "are a general statement of the fundamental obligations of firms under the regulatory system" (PRIN 1.1.2G). And I consider that the Principles relevant to this complaint include Principles 2, 3 and 6 which say:

"Principle 2 – Skill, care and diligence – A firm must conduct its business with due skill, care and diligence.

Principle 3 – Management and control – A firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems.

Principle 6 – Customers' interests – A firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly."

I have carefully considered the relevant law and what this says about the application of the FCA's Principles. In R (British Bankers Association) v Financial Services Authority [2011] EWHC 999 (Admin) ("BBA") Ouseley J said at paragraph 162:

"The Principles are best understood as the ever present substrata to which the specific rules are added. The Principles always have to be complied with. The specific rules do not supplant them and cannot be used to contradict them. They are but specific applications of them to the particular requirement they cover. The general notion that the specific rules can exhaust the application of the Principles is inappropriate. It cannot be an error of law for the Principles to augment specific rules."

And at paragraph 77 of BBA Ouseley J said:

"Indeed, it is my view that it would be a breach of statutory duty for the Ombudsman to reach a view on a case without taking the Principles into account in deciding what would be fair and reasonable and what redress to afford. Even if no Principles had been produced by the FSA, the FOS would find it hard to fulfil its particular statutory duty without having regard to the sort of high level Principles which find expression in the Principles, whoever formulated them. They are of the essence of what is fair and reasonable, subject to the argument about their relationship to specific rules."

In R (Berkeley Burke SIPP Administration Ltd) v Financial Ombudsman Service [2018] EWHC 2878 ("BBSAL"), Berkeley Burke brought a judicial review claim challenging the decision of an ombudsman who had upheld a consumer's complaint against it. The ombudsman considered the FCA Principles and good industry practice at the relevant time. He concluded that it was fair and reasonable for Berkeley Burke to have undertaken due diligence in respect of the investment before allowing it into the SIPP wrapper, and that if it had done so, it would have refused to accept the investment. The ombudsman found Berkeley Burke had therefore not complied with its regulatory obligations and had not treated its client fairly.

Jacobs J, having set out some paragraphs of BBA including paragraph 162 set out above, said (at paragraph 104 of BBSAL):

"These passages explain the overarching nature of the Principles. As the FCA correctly submitted in their written argument, the role of the Principles is not merely to cater for new or unforeseen circumstances. The judgment in BBA shows that they are, and indeed were always intended to be, of general application. The aim of the Principles based regulation described by Ouseley J. was precisely not to attempt to formulate a code covering all possible circumstances, but instead to impose general duties such as those set out in Principles 2 and 6."

The BBSAL judgment also considers s.228 FSMA and the approach an ombudsman is to take when deciding a complaint. The judgment of Jacobs J in BBSAL upheld the lawfulness of the approach taken by the ombudsman in that complaint, which I have described above, and included the Principles and good industry practice at the relevant time as relevant considerations that were required to be taken into account.

As outlined above, Ouseley J in the BBA case held that it would be a breach of statutory duty if I were to reach a view on a complaint without taking the Principles into account in deciding what is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of a case. And Jacobs J adopted a similar approach to the application of the Principles in BBSAL. So, the Principles are a relevant consideration here and I will consider them in the specific circumstances of this complaint.

The Adams court cases and COBS 2.1.1R

I confirm I have taken account of the judgment of the High Court in the case of Adams v Options SIPP [2020] EWHC 1229 (Ch) and the Court of Appeal judgment in Adams v Options UK Personal Pensions LLP [2021] EWCA Civ 474. I note the Supreme Court refused Options permission to appeal the Court of Appeal judgment.

I've considered whether these judgments mean the Principles should not be taken into account in deciding this case. And I am of the view they do not. In the High Court case, HHJ Dight did not consider the application of the Principles and they did not form part of the pleadings submitted by Mr Adams. One of the main reasons why HHJ Dight found that the judgment of Jacobs J in BBSAL was not of direct relevance to the case before him was because "the specific regulatory provisions which the learned judge in Berkeley Burke was asked to consider are not those which have formed the basis of the claimant's case before me."

Likewise, the Principles were not considered by the Court of Appeal. So, the Adams judgments say nothing about the application of the FCA's Principles to the ombudsman's consideration of a complaint.

I acknowledge that COBS 2.1.1R (A firm must act honestly, fairly and professionally in accordance with the best interests of its client) overlaps with certain of the Principles and that this rule was considered by HHJ Dight in the High Court case. Mr Adams pleaded that Options SIPP owed him a duty to comply with COBS 2.1.1R, a breach of which, he argued, was actionable pursuant to section 138(D) of FSMA ("the COBS claim"). HHJ Dight rejected this claim and found that Options SIPP had complied with the best interests rule on the facts of Mr Adams' case.

Although the Court of Appeal ultimately overturned HHJ Dight's judgment, it rejected that part of Mr Adams appeal that related to HHJ Dight's dismissal of the COBS claim on the basis that Mr Adams was seeking to advance a case that was radically different to that found in his initial pleadings. The Court found that this part of Mr Adams' appeal was not a challenge to the grounds on which HHJ Dight had dismissed the COBS claim, but was rather an attempt to put forward an entirely new case.

I note that HHJ Dight found that the factual context of a case would inform the extent of the duty imposed by COBS 2.1.1R. HHJ Dight said at para 148:

"In my judgment in order to identify the extent of the duty imposed by Rule 2.1.1 one has to identify the relevant factual context, because it is apparent from the submissions of each of the parties that the context has an impact on the ascertainment of the extent of the duty. The key fact, perhaps composite fact, in the context is the agreement into which the parties entered, which defined their roles and functions in the transaction."

The facts in Mrs W's case are different from those in Adams. There are also differences between the breaches of COBS 2.1.1R alleged by Mr Adams and the issues in Mrs W's complaint. The breaches were summarised in paragraph 120 of the Court of Appeal judgment. In particular, HHJ Dight considered the contractual relationship between the parties in the context of Mr Adams' pleaded breaches of COBS 2.1.1R that happened after the contract was entered into. In Mrs W's complaint, I am considering whether Options ought to have identified that the business introductions from the introducer involved a risk of consumer detriment and, if so, whether it ought to have ceased accepting introductions from the introducer prior to entering into a contract with Mrs W.

On this point, I think it is also important to emphasise that I must determine this complaint by reference to what is, in my opinion, fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case. And, in doing that, I am required to take into account relevant considerations which include: law and regulations; regulator's rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time. This is a clear and relevant point of difference between this complaint and the judgments in both Adams cases. That was a legal claim which was defined by the formal pleadings in Mr Adams' statement of case.

To be clear, I have proceeded on the understanding Options was not obliged – and not able – to give advice to Mrs W on the suitability of its SIPP or the Crown investment for her personally. But I am satisfied Options' obligations included deciding whether to accept particular investments into its SIPP and/or whether to accept introductions of business from particular businesses.

Regulatory publications

The FCA (and its predecessor, the FSA) has issued a number of publications which remind SIPP operators of their obligations and set out how they might achieve the outcomes envisaged by the Principles, namely:

- The 2009 and 2012 thematic review reports.
- The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance.
- The July 2014 "Dear CEO" letter.

The 2009 report included the following statement:

"We are very clear that SIPP operators, regardless of whether they provide advice, are bound by Principle 6 of the Principles for Businesses ('a firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly') insofar as they are obliged to ensure the fair treatment of their customers. COBS 3.2.3(2) states that a member of a pension scheme is a 'client' for COBS purposes, and 'Customer' in terms of Principle 6 includes clients.

It is the responsibility of SIPP operators to continuously analyse the individual risks to themselves and their clients, with reference to the six TCF consumer outcomes.

We agree that firms acting purely as SIPP operators are not responsible for the SIPP advice given by third parties such as IFAs. However, we are also clear that SIPP operators cannot absolve themselves of any responsibility, and we would expect them to have procedures and controls, and to be gathering and analysing management information, enabling them to identify possible instances of financial crime and consumer detriment such as unsuitable SIPPs. Such instances could then be addressed in an appropriate way, for example by contacting the member to confirm the position, or by contacting the firm giving advice and asking for clarification. Moreover, while they are not responsible for the advice, there is a reputational risk to SIPP operators that facilitate the SIPPs that are unsuitable or detrimental to clients.

Of particular concern were firms whose systems and controls were weak and inadequate to the extent that they had not identified obvious potential instances of poor advice and/or potential financial crime. Depending on the facts and circumstances of individual cases, we may take enforcement action against SIPP operators who do not safeguard their clients' interests in this respect, with reference to Principle 3 of the Principles for Business ('a firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems').

The following are examples of measures that SIPP operators could consider, taken from examples of good practice that we observed and suggestions we have made to firms:

- Confirming, both initially and on an ongoing basis, that intermediaries that advise clients are authorised and regulated by the FSA, that they have the appropriate permissions to give the advice they are providing to the firm's clients, and that they do not appear on the FSA website listing warning notices.*
- Having Terms of Business agreements governing relationships, and clarifying respective responsibilities, with intermediaries introducing SIPP business.*
- Routinely recording and reviewing the type (i.e. the nature of the SIPP investment) and size of investments recommended by intermediaries that give advice and introduce clients to the firm, so that potentially unsuitable SIPPs can be identified.*
- Being able to identify anomalous investments, e.g. unusually small or large transactions or more 'esoteric' investments such as unquoted shares, together with the intermediary that introduced the business. This would enable the firm to seek appropriate clarification, e.g. from the client or their introducer, if it is concerned about the suitability of what was recommended.*
- Requesting copies of the suitability reports provided to clients by the intermediary giving advice. While SIPP operators are not responsible for advice, having this information would enhance the firm's understanding of its clients, making the facilitation of unsuitable SIPPs less likely.*
- Routinely identifying instances of execution-only clients who have signed disclaimers taking responsibility for their investment decisions, and gathering and analysing data regarding the aggregate volume of such business.*
- Identifying instances of clients waiving their cancellation rights, and the reasons for this."*

Although I've quoted from the 2009 Review, I have considered all of the publications I referred to above in their entirety.

I acknowledge that the 2009 and 2012 reports and the "Dear CEO" letter are not formal "guidance" (whereas the 2013 finalised guidance is). However, the fact that the reports and "Dear CEO" letter did not constitute formal guidance does not mean their importance should be underestimated. They provide a reminder that the Principles for Businesses apply and are an indication of the kinds of things a SIPP operator might do to ensure it is treating its customers fairly and produce the outcomes envisaged by the Principles. In that respect the publications, which set out the regulator's expectations of what SIPP operators should be doing, also goes some way to indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice and I am, therefore, satisfied it is appropriate to take them into account.

It is relevant that when deciding what amounted to good industry practice in the BBSAL case, the ombudsman found that “the regulator’s reports, guidance and letter go a long way to clarify what should be regarded as good practice and what should not.” And the judge in BBSAL endorsed the lawfulness of the approach taken by the ombudsman.

Like the ombudsman in the BBSAL case, I do not think the fact the publications, (other than the 2009 Thematic Review Report), post-date the events that took place in relation to Mrs W’s complaint, mean that the examples of good practice they provide were not good practice at the time of the relevant events. Although the later publications were published after the events subject to this complaint, the Principles that underpin them existed throughout, as did the obligation to act in accordance with the Principles.

It is also clear from the text of the 2009 and 2012 reports (and the “Dear CEO” letter in 2014) that the regulator expected SIPP operators to have incorporated the recommended good practices into the conduct of their business already. So, whilst the regulators’ comments suggest some industry participants’ understanding of how the good practice standards shaped what was expected of SIPP operators changed over time, it is clear the standards themselves had not changed.

I note that HHJ Dight in the Adams case did not consider the 2012 thematic review, 2013 SIPP operator guidance and 2014 “Dear CEO” letter to be of relevance to his consideration of Mr Adams’ claim. But it does not follow that those publications are irrelevant to my consideration of what is fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint. I am required to take into account good industry practice at the relevant time. And, as mentioned, the publications indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice at the relevant time.

That doesn’t mean that, in considering what is fair and reasonable, I will only consider Options’ actions with these documents in mind. The reports, Dear CEO letter and guidance gave non-exhaustive examples of good industry practice. They did not say the suggestions given were the limit of what a SIPP operator should do. As the annex to the “Dear CEO” letter notes, what should be done to meet regulatory obligations will depend on the circumstances.

To be clear, I do not say the Principles, or the publications, obliged Options to ensure the SIPP application, pension switch and SIPP investment were suitable for Mrs W. It is accepted Options was not required to give advice to Mrs W, and could not give advice. And I accept the publications do not alter the meaning of, or the scope of, the Principles. But they are evidence of what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time, which would bring about the outcomes envisaged by the Principles.

What did Options’ obligations mean in practice?

In this case, the business Options was conducting was its operation of SIPPs on a non-advisory basis. I am satisfied that meeting its regulatory obligations when conducting this business would include deciding whether to accept or reject particular investments and/or referrals of business. The regulatory publications provided some examples of good industry practice observed by the FSA and FCA during their work with SIPP operators including being satisfied that a particular introducer is appropriate to deal with.

It is clear from Options' 'Non-Regulated Introducer Profile', referred to below, that it understood and accepted its obligations meant that it had a responsibility to carry out due diligence on the introducer. The introductory paragraph at the head of the form says the following:

"As an FSA regulated pensions company we are required to carry out due diligence on independent financial introducer firms looking to put business with us and gain some insight into the business they carry out. We therefore request that you or the appropriate individual in your firm complete and sign this Profile questionnaire and our Terms of Business Agreement as part of our internal compliance requirements.

Thank you for taking the time to complete these documents to ensure the FSA requirements are met."

I am satisfied that, to meet its regulatory obligations, when conducting its business, Options was required to consider whether to accept or reject particular referrals of business, with the Principles in mind. This seems consistent with Options' own understanding. I note in submissions on other complaints Options has told us that "adherence to TCF" is something it had in mind when considering its approach to introducer due diligence i.e. the question of whether it should accept business from a particular introducer.

All in all, I am satisfied that, in order to meet the appropriate standards of good industry practice and the obligations set by the regulator's rules and regulations, Options should have carried out due diligence on the introducer and the investment which was consistent with good industry practice and its regulatory obligations at the time. And in my opinion, Options should have used the knowledge it gained from its due diligence to decide whether to accept or reject a referral of business or particular investment.

Options position in broad terms:

In very broad terms Options position is:

- It carried out due diligence to a degree that was appropriate for its role as non-advisory SIPP operator.
- There is no evidence the introducer gave advice to Mrs W.
- Even if the introducer did advise Mrs W it had the regulatory permissions to do so.
- It is unfair to hold Options responsible for Mrs W's losses.

Due diligence carried out by Options on the introducer:

Options did carry out some due diligence on the introducer. Amongst other things it carried out an assessment of the introducer using a questionnaire it called an introducer profile. This was completed in October 2011. That questionnaire recorded a number of points relating to the introducer including the following:

- It was regulated in Gibraltar.
- It had no pensions advisers and no pensions specialists.
- It essentially carried on no pensions business.
- It had recently "employed a new appointed rep specialising in SIPPs business but all on an execution only basis".
- Its typical clients were "HNW clients" – meaning high net worth.
- It was intending to use SIPPs to hold investments with Crown.

Options does not seem to have asked about the new “appointed rep” who specialised in SIPP’s despite that person being the source of the new business that would be referred to it. It did not seem to ask about, or at least record on that form, expected levels of business or how that business would be sourced by the “appointed rep”.

Options was satisfied from the checks it made that the introducer was regulated in Gibraltar and had permission to carry on regulated activities in the UK as result of an EEA passport.

Due diligence carried out on the investment:

This investment involved buying lot(s) on a larger parcel of land, all of which was to be developed.

I am satisfied that Options knew enough about the investment to understand that, from the point of view of a UK based pensions investor, the investment should be regarded as high risk, and esoteric. It was likely to be difficult to value and illiquid. I note that Options largely referred to the investment in these terms on the Member Declaration it would have required Mrs W to sign as part of the application process.

From its assessment of the investment Options ought to have understood It was unlikely to be suitable for most retail investors and even for high net-worth investors and/or sophisticated investors it was unlikely to be suitable for more than a small proportion of their pension.

I do not say Options was under any obligation to assess the suitability of the investment for individual members. But it should have been aware that there was a considerable risk of consumer detriment if this investment was sold to investors for which it was not suitable.

Options also ought to have been sceptical about the likelihood of investors choosing to invest their pensions in such an investment without being advised or possibly unfairly encouraged to do so.

In my view Options should have been concerned about the introducer’s new business model which involved a new “appointed rep” who apparently specialised in SIPP business, but only on an execution only basis, where the SIPP’s were being set up in order to invest in Crown investments.

Did the introducer give advice in this case?

Chapter 12 of the then FSA’s, now FCA’s, Perimeter Guidance Manual (PERG) provided guidance to firms, such as Options, running personal pension schemes. The guidance at the time of Mrs W’s application included:

Q2. What is a personal pension scheme for the purposes of this regulated activity?

The term is defined in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (the Regulated Activities Order) as any scheme other than an occupational pension scheme (OPS) or a stakeholder pension scheme that is to provide benefits for people:

- on retirement; or
- on reaching a particular age; or
- on termination of service in an employment.

...This will include self-invested personal pension schemes ('SIPPs') as well as personal pensions provided to consumers by product companies such as insurers, unit trust managers or deposit takers (including free-standing voluntary contribution schemes).

So, under the Regulated Activities Order (RAO), Mrs W's existing personal pension and her new SIPP all come within the definition of a personal pension. And Article 82 of the Regulated Activities Order provides that rights under a personal pension are a specified investment.

Advising a person in their capacity as an investor or potential investor to buy or sell such an investment is a regulated activity under Article 53 RAO.

And making arrangements for another person to buy or sell such an investment is a regulated activity under Article 25 RAO. So too is making arrangements with a view to a person who participates in the arrangements buying or selling such an investment.

As explained by Andrews LJ in the Court of Appeal in the Adams case, the question of whether there has been advice under Article 53 should be approached by standing back and looking at what the consumer was told in a realistic and common sense manner.

And the court said a holistic assessment of the behaviour should be made when considering whether there has been making of arrangements under Article 25.

Mrs W says she was called by the introducer firm and that it recommended that she invest in the Cayman Island property investment. But, in order to do so, she would need to transfer funds to a SIPP with Options, as her current scheme – a SIPP with another provider - would not be suitable for the Crown investment. Mrs W says that the introducer assured her she would receive good returns as the land would be purchased below market value. She wasn't told of the high risks involved with transactions such as these, rather she was told that all investments carried some risk..

Mrs W's version of events is consistent with the picture presented by the documentation. She was not a high net-worth investor. Nor was she a sophisticated investor. She was a normal retail investor. And it is difficult to see why such a retail investor should choose to transfer funds from her SIPP to invest in a property-based investment in the Cayman Islands unless she was advised to do so. It is not particularly plausible that such a retail investor would choose to act in that way without advice and would instruct a firm, based in Gibraltar, to arrange that for her on an execution only basis.

The introducer entered into an introducer agreement with Options in order to introduce members who were going to invest in Crown's property-based investments. It therefore seems that the situation was that it was the introducer's intention to act as an introducer of business to Crown. Or put another way, it had a business interest in encouraging people to invest in Crown investments and so it is likely it would have recommended the investment as Mrs W has said.

And there is evidence the introducer was involved in helping with the SIPP application as is evident from the application format. I note the introducer firm was named on the SIPP application as the financial adviser and investment manager for the SIPP and recorded in print.

In all the circumstances, I consider Mrs W's account of events - that she was advised to make the investment, and to transfer pension funds to a SIPP with Options to do so - to be plausible.

So I am satisfied there is evidence that the introducer did advise Mrs W to make the Crown investment. And that it advised Mrs W to open a SIPP with Options, transfer pension funds to Options to make the Crown investment and that this was all one single piece of advice.

It is also my view that Options should have realised there was a real risk that the introducer would give such advice when introducing consumers to it to take out Options' SIPPs in order to invest in Crown investments.

The regulatory status of the introducer:

The introducer profile did not identify where the introducer was intending to carry on the execution only business that would lead to referrals of business to Options, but it would need to be authorised in the UK for any regulated activity it carried on in the UK. And Options satisfied itself that the introducer was authorised in the UK. It had an EEA passport under the MIFID Directive to carry on certain activities in the UK including "investment advice" relating to certain investments.

At the time of Mrs W's SIPP application (and at the time the Introducer Profile was completed) SUP App 3 in the Regulator's Handbook set out guidance on passporting issues including a table at SUP App3.9.5G which included the following setting out the investments and activities covered by a MiFID/a MiFID passport:

Services set out in Annex I to MiFID

SUP App 3.9.5 G

Table 2: MiFID investment services and activities		Part II RAO Investments	Part III RAO Investments
	A MiFID investment services and activities
1.	Reception and transmission of orders in relation to one or more financial instruments	Article 25	Article 76-81, 83-85, 89
5.	Investment advice	Article 53	Article 76-81, 83-85, 89

Accordingly, arranging deals in investments under Article 25 and advising on investments under Article 53 RAO are not covered by a MIFID passport if the activity relates to Article 82 investments i.e. rights under a personal pension.

And guidance at SUP 13A.1.2G of the Handbook, in existence at the time of Mrs W's application and when the introducer profile was completed, made clear that an EEA firm that wanted to carry on activities in the UK which are outside the scope of its EEA rights would require a "top up" permission.

It was Options understanding that the introducer would introduce business to it whereby SIPPs were to be set up for the purpose of investing in Crown investments. The introduction of applicants to Options to establish a SIPP and the instruction to make investments in that SIPP would likely amount to arranging deals in investments.

If the introducer gave advice on the merits of taking out the SIPP or making the investment this would amount to advising on investments. Accordingly, the introducer would need the relevant top up permission if it carried on one or other, or both, of those activities in the UK.

And carrying on one or other, or both, of those activities was a realistic possibility in the circumstances of the introducer arrangement between the introducer and Options. And Options thought the introducer was regulated to carry on those activities in the UK. However the introducer did not have top up permissions needed to carry on those activities in relation to the rights under personal pensions.

my view so far:

In summary it is my view that Options should have:

- had serious concerns about the business model of the introducer.
- considered there was a real risk that the introducer, despite saying it would only act on an execution only basis, would very likely stray into giving advice to take out Crown investments and advise consumers to set up a SIPP with Options and transfer their existing pensions to it in order to make the Crown investment.
- understood that the introducer did not have the necessary top up permissions to advise on rights in personal pensions (or arrange deals relating to them under Article 25 RAO).
- considered that it was exposing its customers to an unacceptable level of risk of unsuitable SIPPs, and the real risk of considerable detriment which might include serious, possibly complete, loss of their pension.

In all the circumstances, it is my view that Options should have decided not to accept business from the introducer.

And it should not have accepted Mrs W's application for a SIPP or her instruction to request the transfer of her existing pension funds to it or her instruction to invest in the Crown investment.

Is it fair to ask Options to compensate Mrs W?

In deciding whether Options is responsible for any losses that Mrs W has suffered on the Crown investment I need to look at what would have happened if Options had done what it should have done i.e. had not accepted Mrs W's SIPP application in the first place.

When considering this I have taken into account the Court of Appeal's supplementary judgment in Adams ([2021] EWCA Civ 1188), insofar as that judgment deals with restitution/compensation.

I am required to make the decision I consider to be fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case and I do not consider the point that Mrs W signed an indemnity (if she did) means that she shouldn't be compensated if it is fair and reasonable to do so.

Had Options acted fairly and reasonably it should have concluded that it should not accept Mrs W's application to open a SIPP. That should have been the end of the matter – it should have told Mrs W that it could not accept the business. And I am satisfied, if that had happened, the arrangement for Mrs W would not have come about in the first place, and the loss she suffered could have been avoided. The financial loss Mrs W suffered on the Crown investment has flowed from Mrs W transferring funds out of her existing pension and into the Options SIPP. For the reasons I set out below I am satisfied that, had the SIPP application not been accepted, the loss would not have been suffered.

Had Options explained to Mrs W why it would not accept the application from the introducer or was terminating the transaction, I find it very unlikely that Mrs W would have tried to find another SIPP operator to accept the business. Especially since Mrs W had already been told by the introducer that her current SIPP (one she had recently transferred to on the advice of the introducer) wasn't a 'suitable vehicle' for this type of investment and that she would need an Options SIPP to be able to invest. Rather it seems that Mrs W had to be persuaded to transfer part of her funds to Options to make the investment. So I think she would more likely have dropped the idea if Options had rejected the application than do anything she could to make the investment in some other way with some other pension provider.

So I'm satisfied that Mrs W would not have continued with the Options' SIPP, had it not been for Options' failings, and would have remained in her existing pension. And, whilst I accept that the introducer is responsible for initiating the course of action that has led to her loss, I consider that Options failed unreasonably to put a stop to that course of action when it had the opportunity and obligation to do so.

I have considered paragraph 154 of the Adams v Options High Court judgment, which says:

"The investment here was acknowledged by the claimant to be high risk and/or speculative. He accepted responsibility for evaluating that risk and for deciding to proceed in knowledge of the risk. A duty to act honestly, fairly and professionally in the best interests of the client, who is to take responsibility for her own decisions, cannot be construed in my judgment as meaning that the terms of the contract should be overlooked, that the client is not to be treated as able to reach and take responsibility for his own decisions and that his instructions are not to be followed."

For all the reasons I've set out, I'm satisfied that it would not be fair to say Mrs W's actions mean she should bear the loss arising as a result of Options' failings. I do not say Options should not have accepted the application because the investment was high risk. I acknowledge Mrs W was likely warned of the high risk and will likely have declared she understood that warning. But Options did not share significant warning signs with her so that she could make an informed decision about whether to proceed or not. In any event, Options should not have asked her to sign the SIPP member instruction and indemnity (or should not have considered and accepted it) as the SIPP application should never have been accepted or alternatively the transaction should have been terminated at a much earlier stage in the process.

So I am satisfied in the circumstances, for all the reasons given, that it is fair and reasonable to conclude that Options should compensate Mrs W for the loss she has suffered.

Options' failure appears to have caused Mrs W serious financial loss. I accept Mrs W will also have suffered much worry, and distress, and Options should compensate Mrs W for this also.

I am not asking Options to account for loss that goes beyond the consequences of its failings. I am satisfied those failings have caused the full extent of the loss in question. That other parties might also be responsible for that same loss is a distinct matter, which I am not able to determine. However, that fact should not impact on Mrs W's right to fair compensation from Options for the full amount of her loss."

Putting things right

My aim is to return Mrs W to the position she would now be in but for what I consider to be Options' failure to carry out adequate due diligence checks before accepting Mrs W's SIPP application from the introducer or for not terminating the transaction before completion.

In light of the above, Options should calculate fair compensation by comparing the current position to the position Mrs W would be in if she had not transferred funds from her existing pension. In summary, Options should:

- Obtain the notional transfer value of Mrs W's previous pension plan.
- Obtain the actual transfer value of Mrs W's SIPP, including any outstanding charges.
- Pay a commercial value to buy any illiquid investments (or treat them as having a zero value).
- Pay an amount into Mrs W 's SIPP so as to increase the transfer value to equal the notional value established. This payment should take account of any available tax relief and the effect of charges.
- If the SIPP needs to be kept open only because of the illiquid investment/s and is used only or substantially to hold that asset, then any future SIPP fees should be waived until the SIPP can be closed.
- If Mrs W has paid any fees or charges from funds outside of her pension arrangements, Options should also refund these to Mrs W. Interest at a rate of 8% simple per year from the date of payment to the date of refund should be added to this.
- Pay to Mrs W an amount of £500 to compensate her for the distress and inconvenience she's been caused.

I've set out how Options should go about calculating compensation in more detail below.

Treatment of the illiquid assets held within the SIPP

I think it would be best if any illiquid assets held could be removed from the SIPP. Mrs W would then be able to close the SIPP, if she wishes. That would then allow her to stop paying the fees for the SIPP. The valuation of the illiquid investment/s may prove difficult, as there is no market for it. For calculating compensation, Options should establish an amount it's willing to accept for the investment/s as a commercial value. It should then pay the sum agreed plus any costs and take ownership of the investment/s.

If Options is able to purchase the illiquid investment/s then the price paid to purchase the holding/s will be allowed for in the current transfer value (because it will have been paid into the SIPP to secure the holding/s).

If Options is unable, or if there are any difficulties in buying Mrs W's illiquid investment/s, it should give the holding/s a nil value for the purposes of calculating compensation. In this instance Options may ask Mrs W to provide an undertaking to account to it for the net amount of any payment the SIPP may receive from the relevant holding/s. That undertaking should only take effect once Mrs W has been compensated in full, to include her receipt of any loss above our award limit, and should allow for the effect of any tax and charges on the amount Mrs W may receive from the investment and any eventual sums she would be able to access. Options will have to meet the cost of drawing up any such undertaking and any reasonable costs incurred by Mrs W in taking advice to approve it.

Calculate the loss Mrs W has suffered as a result of making the transfer Options should first contact the provider of the original SIPP plan/s from which the monies were transferred into the Options SIPP and ask it to provide a notional value for the policy as at the date of calculation. For the purposes of the notional calculation the provider should be told to assume no monies would've been transferred away from the plan, and Mrs W would've invested the monies transferred to Options in the same manner, and in the same proportions, as she invested the monies she did retain in the original SIPP.

Any contributions or withdrawals Mrs W has made will need to be taken into account whether the notional value is established by the ceding provider or calculated as set out below.

Any withdrawal out of the Options' SIPP should be deducted at the point it was actually paid so it ceases to accrue any return in the calculation from that point on. The same applies for any contributions made, these should be added to the notional calculation from the date they were actually paid, so any growth they would've enjoyed is allowed for.

If there are any difficulties in obtaining a notional valuation from the previous provider, then Options should instead arrive at a notional valuation by assuming the monies would have enjoyed a return in line with the FTSE UK Private Investors Income Total Return Index (prior to 1 March 2017, the FTSE WMA Stock Market Income Total Return Index). That is a reasonable proxy for the type of return that could have been achieved over the period in question.

The notional value of Mrs W's original plan if monies hadn't been transferred (established in line with the above) less the current value of the SIPP (as at date of calculation) is Mrs W's loss.

Pay an amount into Mrs W's SIPP so that the transfer value is increased by the loss calculated above.

If the redress calculation demonstrates a loss, the compensation should if possible be paid into Mrs W's pension plan. The payment should allow for the effect of charges and any available tax relief. The compensation shouldn't be paid into the pension plan if it would conflict with any existing protection or allowance.

If a payment into the pension isn't possible or has protection or allowance implications, it should be paid directly to Mrs W as a lump sum after making a notional deduction to allow for income tax that would otherwise have been paid.

In response to my provisional decision, Mrs W's representative explained that it was likely Mrs W wouldn't be a taxpayer in retirement. Based on what we've been told, I think it is plausible that Mrs W may not be a taxpayer in retirement. So, Mrs W should provide such details as Options may reasonably require in relation to her retirement provisions and her likely financial position in retirement, so that Options can assess this before making any payment to her direct (if a payment into the pension isn't possible).

Typically, 25% of Mrs W's loss could have been taken as tax-free cash and 75% would have been taxed according to her likely income tax rate in retirement.

- If the evidence indicates Mrs W is more likely than not to be a basic rate taxpayer in retirement, making a notional deduction of 15% overall from the loss adequately reflects this.

- If the evidence indicates Mrs W more likely than not won't be a taxpayer in retirement, then no notional deduction for income tax should be made.

SIPP fees

If the investments can't be removed from the SIPP, and because of this it can't be closed after compensation has been paid, then it wouldn't be fair for Mrs W to have to continue to pay annual SIPP fees to keep the SIPP open. So, if the SIPP needs to be kept open only because of the illiquid investment/s and is used only or substantially to hold that asset, then any future SIPP fees should be waived until the SIPP can be closed.

Pay Mrs W £500 for the distress and inconvenience caused.

Mrs W has been caused distress and inconvenience by the loss of her pension benefits. Mrs W's pension is now worth significantly less than she thought it would be. This is money Mrs W cannot afford to lose and its loss will naturally have caused her much distress and inconvenience. I consider a payment of £500 is appropriate to compensate for that.

Interest

The compensation resulting from this loss assessment must be paid to Mrs W or into her SIPP within 28 days of the date Options receives notification of her acceptance of my final decision. The calculation should be carried out as at the date of my final decision. Interest must be added to the compensation amount at the rate of 8% per year simple from the date of my final decision to the date of settlement if the compensation is not paid within 28 days.

Options may be required by His Majesty's Revenue & Customs to deduct tax from any interest paid to Mrs W. Should Mrs W request it, Options must provide her with a certificate setting out the amount of tax deducted so that she can reclaim it if appropriate.

Assignment of rights

If Options believes other parties to be wholly or partly responsible for the loss, it is free to pursue those other parties. So, if Mrs W's loss does not exceed £160,000, or if Options accepts my recommendation below that it should pay the full loss as calculated above, the compensation payable to Mrs W may be contingent on the assignment by her to Options of any rights of action she may have against other parties in relation to her transfer to the SIPP and the investments if Options is to request this. Options should cover the reasonable cost of drawing up, and Mrs W's taking advice on and approving, any assignment required.

Where I uphold a complaint, I can award fair compensation of up to £160,000, plus any interest and/or costs that I consider are appropriate. Where I consider that fair compensation requires payment of an amount that might exceed £160,000, I may recommend that the business pays the balance.

Determination and award: It's my final decision than I require Options UK Personal Pensions LLP to pay Mrs W the compensation amount as set out in the steps above, up to a maximum of £160,000 plus any interest and/or costs.

Where the compensation amount does not exceed £160,000, I additionally require Options UK Personal Pensions LLP pay Mrs W any interest on that amount in full, as set out above.

Where the compensation amount already exceeds £160,000, I only require Options UK Personal Pensions LLP to pay Mrs W any interest as set out above on the sum of £160,000 and any costs awarded.

Recommendation: If the compensation amount exceeds £160,000, I also recommend that Options UK Personal Pensions LLP pays Mrs W the balance. I additionally recommend any interest calculated as set out above on this balance and any costs awarded be paid to Mrs W.

If Mrs W accepts my final decision, the award is binding on Options UK Personal Pensions LLP. My recommendation is not part of my determination or award. Options UK Personal Pensions LLP doesn't have to do what I recommend.

Further, it's unlikely that Mrs W can accept my decision and go to Court to ask for the balance. Mrs W may want to consider getting independent legal advice before deciding whether to accept this final decision.

My jurisdiction decision

It's my decision that this complaint was made in time and can be considered by the Financial Ombudsman Service

My final decision

It's my final decision that I uphold Mrs W's complaint. I require that Options UK Personal Pensions LLP calculate and pay the award, and take the actions, set out above.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mrs W to accept or reject my decision before 19 April 2024.
