

The complaint

Mr M's complaint is that Options UK Personal Pensions LLP (formerly Carey Pensions) ('Options') should not have accepted his self-invested personal pension (SIPP) application from an unregulated, overseas adviser which resulted in him transferring from a defined benefit occupational pension scheme.

Background

Given the various parties involved in the pension transfer and subsequent investment of the SIPP I've set out a summary of each below.

The entities involved

Options UK Personal Pensions LLP

Options is a SIPP provider and administrator. It was regulated by the FSA at the time of the events complained about – now the FCA. It was – and still is – authorised to arrange (bring about) deals in investments; deal in investments as principal; establish, operate and wind up a personal pension scheme; and make arrangements with a view to transactions in investments.

Caledonian

Caledonian was the trading name of MMG Associates which was registered in the British Virgin Islands. Caledonian wasn't authorised in the UK to undertake regulated activities and it doesn't appear on the FCA's (formerly FSA's) Financial Services Register. There is no evidence it was authorised to carry out such activities in any other jurisdiction.

Business C

Business C is an investment manager based in the Isle of Man. The evidence is that Business C agreed to manage or provide oversight of investments taken out by Caledonian's customers after they had transferred their pensions. I shall call the individual representing Business C, who is mentioned in this decision, Mr P.

James Brearley & Sons Ltd (JBL)

JBL is regulated in the UK by the FCA. It was custodian for the investments into which Mr M's money was invested.

The relationship between Caledonian and Options

Options' relationship with Caledonian began in early 2012. Options has confirmed there were 509 introductions to it made by Caledonian between 27 April 2012 and 20 May 2013.

Options has said that it carried out due diligence checks on Caledonian and has provided supporting evidence of the checks it made.

I have set out below a summary of what I consider to be the key events and/or actions during the relationship between Options and Caledonian, which I have observed from the available evidence (this includes evidence from Mr M's case file and generic submissions Options has made to us about its due diligence on, and its relationship with, Caledonian).

March 2012

A business profile was completed which recorded Options' first meeting with Mr C of Caledonian. This set out Caledonian's proposed business model as follows (redacted as appropriate):

"[Mr C] detailed his business model,

He was preferred adviser for the Armed Forces occupational pension scheme for individuals who had left the armed forces and were taking up positions in close security work in places such as Iraq/Afghanistan/Iran etc... and also anti piracy positions.

The profile of the clients were described as:

- 30 to 50 year olds*
- Had been in the armed forces for between 6 to 10 years*
- Had left the armed forces and wanted to transfer their pension arrangements*
- They had no expectation of long life expectancy*
- They were living today so wanted to access funds earlier then they could if their pension stayed in the armed forces pension scheme*
- They were generally still resident in UK but some were now living abroad in various countries such as Thailand, Germany, Spain etc.*
- They were now earning quite large salaries circa £70k plus*

[Mr C] was provided referrals from the armed forces pensions contact he had and also he received enquiries as a result of his clients speaking to other ex-armed forces personnel.

He had been doing large volumes of QROPS business with a provider called (business M) but recognised the fact that a UK SIPP was probably more appropriate for the majority of his clients.

He was currently putting them into an international [provider's name] Bond, the underlying investments were regulated.

[Mr C] himself was not a regulated adviser, he was a consultant to these clients and advised (my emphasis) them on their armed forces transfers only, he was a qualified accountant and was a member of the Chartered Institute of Accountants.

His company was trading as Caledonian although the holding company was a BVI company called MMG Associates.

He was developing a relationship with (Mr P), and may consider [Business C] as an alternative investment provider in due course. Although he was currently wanting a relationship with a SIPP provider.

[Mr C] was looking at volume business in the region of 50 schemes a month."

16 March 2012

Mr C of Caledonian signed and dated Options' "Non-Regulated Introducer Profile". The form set out its purpose as follows:

"As an FSA regulated pensions company we are required to carry out due diligence as best practice on unregulated introducer firms looking to introduce clients to us to gain some insight into the business they carry out."

On the Non-Regulated Introducer Profile, Caledonian responded to a number of questions. The key points were:

Under the section headed "Company Information" the following was recorded:

- It had branches in Chile, Peru, Columbia, Argentina, Brazil and Switzerland.
- It had been trading since 1997.

Under the section headed "Product Information", in response to the question, "what products does the firm promote/distribute" the answer noted was:

"Offshore savings plans + investment bonds....."

Caledonian set out that the products had been accepted by other SIPP providers, including Options, and they hadn't been declined by other product providers.

Under the section headed "Sales and Marketing Approach", in response to the question as to how Caledonian would obtain clients, the answer was by "referral" and that the sales process would be:

"Referral – Visit – Analysis – Visit."

When asked to describe the average profile of the type of client Caledonian took on, the answer was:

"Income £70,000, Age 36, Self employed in the security industry."

When Caledonian was asked how much business would be sold through pension arrangements the answer given was:

"50/50 Pension Transfer/Regular Savings Plan"

In response to a question about the typical commission structure the answer was:

"7% up front from bond – 0.5% Trail."

Under the section headed, "Training and Information", in response to the question, "what training was provided to its agents” the answer was:

“Ongoing product training and accompanied meetings.”

In response to a question about what specific pension training was delivered to its agent the answer was:

“Visits to providers directly.”

In response to how the business produced by its agents was monitored, the answer was:

“Fully administrative structure – Caledonian, Careys – Compliance.”

In response to a question about the kind of service it sought from a SIPP provider, the answer was:

“Administrative & Compliance.”

Under the section headed, “Legal and Regulatory Information” the following was recorded:

- Caledonian did not work with any FSA regulated company or adviser.
- It wasn’t a member of any professional or trade body.
- It had no PI cover in place at the time.
- It hadn’t been subject to any (or ongoing) FSA supervisory visits or censure.

The response to the question “What measures are in place to ensure the Firm engage legal advice on the activities it carries out to ensure regulated activities are not carried out?” was given as:

“Majority of business carried out in unregulated jurisdictions but where regulations apply we are licensed to carry out our activities.”

In response to the question as to how Caledonian demonstrates it treats its customers fairly it said that:

“Compliance & Procedures in current alignment with FSA TCF.”

In response to a question about what Caledonian’s objectives were for the coming 12 months it was noted:

“To continue to develop a fully compliant business of PT to HM Forces”

With regards to members pension scheme business it was noted that Caledonian was seeking a “Compliant structure in a Regulated structure.”

An email was sent from Options’ compliance department to Mr C, requesting a copy of Caledonian’s latest company accounts and certified copy of the passport for its principals/directors.

3 April 2012

Options’ compliance department sent a chaser email to Caledonian for the documents it requested on 23 March 2012. A senior consultant at Caledonian replied on the same day and provided a copy of Mr C's passport. The consultant said she would speak with Mr C when he returned from a trip, regarding the company accounts.

4 April 2012

Mr C says he's been in Iraq and will send documents once he's back.

27 April 2012

Options started to receive introductions from Caledonian.

1 August 2012

Ahead of a compliance audit, a Team Leader at Options contacted Caledonian to ask again for the certified passports and annual accounts. In an internal email Options confirmed it had spoken with Mr C and he'd be "sending an urgent request for the documentation we require".

4 September 2012

A "Non-regulated Introducer Agreement Terms of Business" document between Options and "MMG Associates Ltd T/A Caledonian International Associates" was signed and dated by Mr C. That agreement included:

"The Business Introducer undertakes that they will not provide advice as defined by the Act in relation to the SIPP – for the avoidance of doubt this includes reference to advice on the selection of The SIPP Operator, contributions, transfer of benefits, taking benefits and HMRC rules:"

Options has said that these terms of business were actually received by Caledonian on 21 March 2012.

1 November 2012

Options conducted a 'World Check' (a risk intelligence tool which allows subscribers to conduct background checks on businesses and individuals) on two Caledonian employees - including Mr C. This check did not reveal any issues.

Undated document likely to have been created in March 2013

Options has provided an undated document called the "Overseas Introducer Assessment Proforma". The document listed several criteria and assessed its internal measurement criteria as 'low risk', 'medium risk' or 'high risk' with supporting notes.

This document isn't dated but the earliest this is likely to have been completed is around March 2013 when Options appears to have been looking more closely at its compliance requirements for Caledonian.

I have set out below what the sections of this document recorded and the level of risk that was noted:

- Google Search and FCA

This section was assessed as 'low risk'. The notes set out that there were no adverse comments.

- Regulatory

This section was assessed as 'high risk'. The notes said that: "Cannot find any regulatory information from the details held."

- Company

This section had a mixture of assessments which were mainly medium risk. It was set out that Caledonian had:

"No UK branch. Cannot see any EEA regulatory details."

And this was classed as 'high risk'.

Caledonian's trading history was recorded as 'medium risk'. The notes set out that: "Unknown company establishment time – cannot find any details from information received."

It was also that:

"No accounts requested? ...No articles of association requested/received"

'Meeting' was recorded as 'medium risk'. The notes recorded: "Meeting held at Carey Pensions UK office March 2012."

- Advice

This section was assessed as 'high risk', and it was noted:

"Unregulated – No details of how advice given. No regulatory bodies / permissions seen. Although suggested on email that advice given in Jordan?"

And:

"Advice possibly given in Jordan, although not sure if true for UK based clients".

- Transfer / Switches.

This section was assessed as 'high risk' and in particular it was noted that the funds for investment within the SIPP were to be generated from:

"Transfers from Armed Forces Pension occupational scheme."

- Client Profile

This section was assessed as 'high risk'. The notes set out:

"Client Profile: 30-50 years old. Part of armed forced 6-10 years. Generally still UK residents, some abroad. Now working in security earning £70k pa. HOWEVER, recently received business outside of profile."

At the end of the 'Company Assessment' section the overall result was recorded as Amber described as 'Queries to raise' and that:

"company details are a mixture of green and amber raise with technical review committee before proceeding."

The overall result at the end of the 'Advice/Client Profile/Investment' section was assessed as a mixture of 'high risk' and 'medium risk' and should be declined.

7 March 2013

An internal email was sent by an Options' manager to other Options employees summarising a call Options had held with Caledonian (Mr C). The summary said:

- Options had noted that following recent FSA (now FCA) review and guidance all SIPP operators were being asked to look at the business received from their introducers against their expectations surrounding the type of profile.
- Options' understanding was that the introductions from Caledonian would be ex-military, aged approximately 36 years old and who were self-employed in the security industry with earnings of approximately £70,000. However, out of the seven new business cases that they reviewed on 6 March 2013, three of them had moved away from the expected profile.
- Options had asked Caledonian if its profile was changing/extending. Caledonian explained:

"predominantly the members were in the close protection industry which as @ 5 years ago they all went into. He said that foreign operatives were now coming in in a more organised structure. Some were getting promoted into senior positions. Many were previously divers in the military and so going into Diving elsewhere."

- Options had asked Caledonian to put together a note to update its file as to the business it would receive.

20 March 2013

Options sent Caledonian an email. Options noted that it was waiting for Caledonian to provide an update to the changes in its profile. Options also noted it had received further business that day which was against the expected profile.

26 April 2013

An Options employee in its compliance department sent an email to several Options employees. She raised concerns about Caledonian's business practices. She said:

"We have a responsibility to proactively monitor our distribution channels to ensure our products do not end up with customers for whom it is not suitable. Based on recent correspondence with Caledonian I am increasingly concerned by their business practices and therefore believe we should review our relationship with them and the business they have introduced. I will arrange a meeting for next week to discuss. In the meantime we need to determine the answers to the questions below to help facilitate our discussions."

The employee asked in April 2013 for answers to several questions, the responses to which I have set out below.

Do Caledonian provide advice on investments within the SIPP? No they don't, they consult with the client on the feasibility of transferring their Armed Forces Pension Scheme into a SIPP and their partner to manage the investment is [Business C]”

10 May 2013

Options sent Caledonian an email requesting further information. The email confirmed Options were reviewing the terms of business in light of recent announcements from the FCA and its own compliance reviews.

Options said it was keen to continue to do business with Caledonian, but it must be within the regulatory framework and that it must satisfy “the regulators should they come in and review this area of our business, so we must start with ensuring we understand each stage of the process, to enable us to develop a robust and compliant process for this business moving forward.” Options asked Caledonian a number of questions, which I have set out below.

1. “Can you provide your organisational structure and the jurisdiction in which each is registered and the regulation/regulator that each company operates within. If you are relying on any exemptions please state which exemptions and the reasons you believe you can operate within those exemptions

2. Are you giving advice and if so in what capacity and under what regulatory environment are you providing this advice.
3. What offices do you have and where, do the jurisdictions in which you have offices have a regulatory regime, if so can you provide details of the regulators in those jurisdictions.
4. On what basis are you providing illustrations and the reasons for this basis
5. Do you meet all your clients in Jordan, if not why do your Non Solicitation forms signed by yourself confirm the advice was given in Jordan
6. Please confirm the profile of your clients
7. Please confirm how you receive introductions to your clients
8. Can you update information about your team their background, expertise in dealing with pensions
9. On the Non Solicitation letters you note that Caledonian does not have a permanent place of business in the UK. However, you request correspondence to be sent to [UK location] Please can you clarify Caledonian's presence in the UK and the nature of the office in [UK location]"

Options said that from 1 May 2013 it had implemented changes to its requirements, and Caledonian must have a "UK FCA regulated adviser providing the TVAS and the sign off for the suitability of transfers from occupational schemes of any values."

15 May 2013

Options sent an internal email which was a summary of a telephone conversation with Mr P of Business C. The summary recorded that:

- Mr P confirmed that an FCA Regulated Adviser would be providing the TVAS reports on all Caledonian introduced clients. This adviser would be placed in their Milton Keynes office for a period of time and would produce TVAS reports on the back book of business with Caledonian.
- On this understanding Options had agreed they would continue to process applications where the TVAS report was currently being issued by Mr P.

20 May 2013

Options says this was the date of the last introduction made to it by Caledonian.

23 May 2013

A handwritten summary was made of a meeting between Caledonian (Mr P and Mr C) and Options. This included the following.

- Mr C said he was a consultant to armed forces and not an adviser in the FCA sense.
- The [UK location] address was a postal address and not a working office.
- Mr C said he meets with clients in the UK. It was noted that the profile document said that he met them in Jordan. So, a letter was needed about where advice was given.

- The initial contact was abroad. The client contacts Caledonian if they want to transfer their pension.
- Caledonian's website didn't mention that it would give advice. And their documents made it clear that no advice was given and that clients should take advice from a regulated adviser.
- Caledonian explained that the reason for lots of transfers was because of the market and their relationship with the providers.
- The proposal going forward involved an appointed representative of a Manchester IFA being a pension specialist and it had the necessary qualifications. Going forward the Manchester IFA would deal with business.
- Options agreed to allow Caledonian a four-week window to put measures in force.
- The question about providing Options with a letter if advice was being given was irrelevant as Caledonian didn't provide any advice.
- Caledonian said its illustrations were provided to facilitate the transfer of the pensions. Options query was whether this was advice.
- There also appears to be an internal note which said it should be established if there was a Caledonian 'terms of business'.

I have not seen evidence that any of the agreed actions were completed.

May 2013

Options decided to review its relationship with Caledonian. Options has provided a copy of its document headed, "Caledonian Relationship Review 2013". I have reviewed the document in full, but have only quoted below what I consider to be the key part:

" ... Following a detailed review of the process and documentation concerns were raised regarding whether the clients [of Caledonian] could be deemed to be receiving advice through an unregulated entity.

Following a request for further clarification on these points we have not been able to satisfy ourselves that this is not the case.

We have insisted that they move to a model that all cases are fully advised by an FCA regulated firm/individual, which has been accepted ...

Following a meeting in the Milton Keynes office ... where [Mr C] from Caledonian, and [Mr P] of [Business C] explained their current process and documentation and described their future process, [and] further discussions ... it was decided that they had not satisfied us enough with their current processes for us to continue to allow taking on new business in the interim without the use of a UK regulated firm or individual who was suitably qualified.

[Options] has instructed the team of this decision so from week beginning 28th May any new business received will be rejected unless it comes through an FCA regulated firm."

It set out a detailed process by which Caledonian proposed to move to a model where all clients would be fully advised by an FCA regulated firm/individual, and it highlighted the benefits of this new approach as being:

"All schemes are coming in on an advised basis

Brings the process and clients into the UK regulated process

Brings the clients into the FSCS and FOS protections

Ensures all occupational schemes undergo analysis and advice"

I have not seen evidence that this advised or regulated process described ever came into effect for any applications made by Caledonian. As noted, no further business introduced by Caledonian was accepted by Options after 20 May 2013.

Mr M's dealings with Options and Caledonian

Mr M applied for an Options SIPP in February 2013. His application form was sent to Options by Caledonian International Associates.

The front page of the SIPP application stated the following:

"The Carey Pension Scheme Application Form For Direct Clients.

(SIPP to be established on execution only).

This form should be used if you are a client establishing a SIPP without advice. You have made this decision independently and are aware of the implications of this decision.

Please read the Key Features Document, Terms & Conditions and Fee Schedules prior to completing this application form...

Carey Pensions UK LLP, and Carey Pensions Trustees UK Ltd have not provided any advice and are not responsible for the suitability or appropriateness of your decision to establish a SIPP"

On page 4 of the application form, under the section headed Transfers, it said that:

"Please Note, whilst we cannot give advice, we recommend that in these circumstances you seek appropriate advice..."

And that Mr M intended to transfer about £24,000 from the Armed Forces Pension Scheme.

On page 5 under the section headed Investments, Mr M's preprinted information said he would be using Business C as his investment company. That section of the form also said that:

"As you do not have a Financial Adviser, your investment choices are your sole responsibility. You will instruct us and we will act on those instructions as long as it is an accepted investment in the Carey Pension Scheme.

*Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd will not at any time review any aspects of your appointed Investment Manager's financial status or investment and risk strategies nor have any involvement in your investment choices and selection, nor give advice on the suitability of your investment choices. We would always recommend independent advice be obtained from a suitably qualified adviser....[my emphasis]

You are responsible for the ongoing review and monitoring of the investments you have chosen - and remember - all investments can go down in value as well as up. Carey Pensions is not responsible for any investment choices or decisions."

On page 9 which was signed and dated by Mr M, under the section headed Declaration, it said that:

"I hereby apply for membership as a direct client of the Carey Pension Scheme;

I acknowledge and accept the Terms & Conditions of the Carey Pension Scheme and agree to be bound by the Scheme Rules of the Carey Pension Scheme;

I confirm that I have read and understand the relevant Key Features Documents, Terms & Conditions, and all aspects of the application form;

I confirm that all details provided are true and complete to the best of my knowledge and belief;

I hereby consent to Carey Pensions UK LLP requesting the transfer of my policies listed in the application form;

...

I confirm that I will instruct Carey Pensions UK LLP to make the investments as detailed in the application form;

I understand that it is my sole responsibility to make decisions relating to the purchase, retention or sale of any investments held within the Carey Pension Scheme;

I understand that Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd are not in any way able to provide me with any advice;

I confirm that I am establishing the Carey Pension Scheme on an execution only basis;

I confirm that I understand that the value of my pension scheme can go down as well as up depending on the performance of the investments chosen."

Mr M also signed a 2013 Fee Schedule which set out the fees applicable to his Options SIPP and confirmed that Caledonian would receive a fee of £700.

Mr M signed Options' member declaration form on 9 February 2013.

This confirmed the following:

"I the above named write to instruct Carey Pensions UK LLP to establish a Self Invested Personal Pension (SIPP) and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd to proceed with the transfer of Occupational Pension Scheme benefits from The Armed Forces Pension to the Carey Pension Scheme.

I confirm that I have received full and appropriate advice from Caledonian International and following this advice I wish to proceed with the transfer. [my emphasis]

I am fully aware and understand that by giving an instruction to proceed with the transfer of my Occupational Scheme Benefits to the Carey Pension Scheme I may lose substantial benefits.

However, being of sound mind and in full possession of the facts I have considered the matter of the transfer and as an individual confirm my decision and instruction to both Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd to proceed with the transfer of the Occupational Scheme Benefits.

I am fully aware that in acting on my instructions both Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd act on an Execution Only Basis.

Neither Carey Pensions UK LLP nor Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd have provided any advice whatsoever in respect of this transaction.

Should any tax charges be deemed by HMRC to apply in future these will be paid directly from the fund or by me as the member of the Scheme.

I do not hold Carey Pensions UK LLP or Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd responsible for any fluctuations in value of either of the Occupational Pension Scheme or the Carey Pension Scheme.

I agree to provide Carey Pension Trustees UK Ltd with any further information and/or documentation they may require prior to completing this transaction.

I fully indemnify both Carey Pensions UK LLP and Carey Pension Trustees Ltd at all times against any and all liability arising from this transaction."

The new SIPP was set up shortly afterwards with the transfer payment from the AFPS being received in April 2013. Funds of approximately £22,000 were subsequently transferred to be invested with JBL in May 2013.

Options has also provided a copy of an email dated 24 September 2018 providing an update regarding a number of suspended funds. It ended by saying that Mr M might not be invested in all the funds listed. Mr M responded asking:

“Could you confirm if any of this information affects me in any way, I don’t recall receiving any previous email.”

Options responded setting out details of four funds held by Mr M’s SIPP. It said two of the funds were trading, another had sold its underlying property and Options were waiting details of the distribution to shareholders. The fourth fund was suspended and no sales or purchases could be made.

Mr M confirmed that Options had cleared “things up a bit more” and said he would contact them again when he was in the UK. Options hasn’t provided further evidence as to whether Mr M did so.

Mr M’s complaint to Options

Mr M complained to Options, through his representative, in a letter dated 24 April 2024. It appears that Mr M did not sign and date the letter until 20 May 2024. Options replied to Mr M’s complaint on 20 June 2024 saying Mr M’s complaint had been received on 23 May 2024.

Options said Mr M’s complaint had been made too late for our service to consider. It said that Mr M’s pension was taken out, and the investments within the pension made, in 2013. His complaint wasn’t made until 2024, more than six years later.

And Options said Mr M would have been aware from the declaration he signed in 2013 that he accepted he would be losing a secure pension by transferring away from the Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS). Mr M was therefore aware that there was a cause for complaint that he had, or would, suffer loss in 2013.

In September 2018, Options had written to Mr M about suspended funds held within the JBL portfolio. Mr M requested further clarification which Options provided in October 2018. It said that notification of the suspended funds was “more than sufficient” for Mr M to have initiated an investigation and make a complaint. And at the time, in the lead up to the unsuccessful judicial review in Berkeley Burke SIPP Administration Limited v Financial Ombudsman Service [2018] EWHC 2878 (admin) “there had been a build-up in the amount of information regarding SIPP complaints” so Mr M would have become more aware of the responsibilities of SIPP providers, including that in certain circumstances they could be held responsible for investments failing in SIPPs.

Mr M would reasonably have been expected to have become aware of the responsibilities of SIPP providers as early as 2019 so his complaint should have been submitted within three years of this period. Mr M’s complaint was not received until 23 May 2024. Mr M’s complaint had been made outside the time limits that apply to this service.

Dissatisfied with Options’ response, in July 2024, Mr M asked this service to investigate his complaint.

Our investigation

We asked Mr M about his dealings with Caledonian. Mr M confirmed that he met with Caledonian’s adviser at home in the UK. He has no paperwork relating to his dealings with Caledonian.

Mr M has told this service that “he wasn’t aware there were any issues with his pension before his friend contacted him to check.” And that conversation with his friend took place in January 2024, which resulted in him contacting his representative and the subsequent complaint to Options.

His representative noted that:

“He contacted us straight away to look into the matter and did not understand initially why there would be a claim against the pension as he was advised by Caledonian.”

An investigator reviewed Mr M’s complaint and concluded that it had been made in time for this service to consider. She went on to set out that she didn’t consider Options had acted fairly and how she thought Options should resolve Mr M’s complaint.

In terms of the time limits, she agreed that Mr M’s complaint had been made more than six years after the events he was complaining about. But she didn’t agree with Options that Mr M would have been aware of a problem with his pension before 2024 when an ex-colleague contacted him. And as Mr M complained within three years of that point, his complaint had been made in time.

Mr M’s representative confirmed they accepted the investigator’s opinion. Options did not.

Options maintained that Mr M’s complaint had been made too late. It provided additional evidence that it said showed, by July 2018, Mr M was aware there might be a problem with his JBL investment, that he may or had suffered a loss and may have cause for complaint.

In July 2018, Options wrote to all members who held JBL bonds informing them it had received a fund update which included details of suspended funds, amongst which were funds Mr M’s SIPP was invested in.

And Options said DISP does not say that a complainant needs to know what has gone wrong, who is to blame or what can be done to correct it. A complainant simply needs to know enough for it to be reasonable for them to begin investigating the matter further.

As no agreement had been reached, the Investigator informed both parties that her opinion hadn’t changed, and she would arrange for an Ombudsman to consider the complaint. She invited both parties to provide further comment.

Mr M’s representative said Mr M wasn’t aware of the extent of a SIPP provider’s due diligence responsibilities until recently. It is unreasonable to assume he was aware earlier when Options did not communicate its responsibilities to him. Mr M had no knowledge of the Berkeley Burke judgment or its relevance to his situation. Options’ interpretation is “set at an unrealistically high standard.”

Options referred to a complaint reviewed by an ombudsman colleague where it said ‘near identical’ circumstances apply. In that case it had been concluded that the complaint had been brought too late for this service to consider. Options considers that Mr M’s complaint is time-barred and that we do not have the jurisdiction to consider it.

I issued a provisional decision setting out that I’d found Mr M’s complaint was one this service could consider, and it should be upheld on its merits. I also set out the basis on which the complaint should be resolved.

Mr M’s representative confirmed he accepted the provisional decision. Options did not respond.

What I've decided – and why

I've considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what's fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

As neither party provided further comment in response to my provisional decision I'm issuing my final decision on the same lines.

Our jurisdiction

Options didn't consent to our consideration of Mr M's complaint on the grounds that he made it too late based on our six- and three-year time limits. In my provisional decision I set out that Mr M's complaint had been made more than six years after the events about which he complained. However, it had been made within three years of when he should reasonably have known something was wrong, he had suffered a loss and could complain to Options about it. Therefore, for the reasons I gave in my provisional decision, the complaint has been made in time and we can consider its merits.

The merits of Mr M's complaint

In considering what is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of this complaint, I have taken into account relevant law and regulations; regulators' rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time.

With that in mind I'll start by setting out what I have identified as the relevant considerations to deciding what is fair and reasonable in this case.

The Principles

The FCA's Principles for Businesses are of particular relevance to my decision. The Principles for Businesses, which are set out in the FCA's handbook "are a general statement of the fundamental obligations of firms under the regulatory system" (PRIN 1.1.2G). And, I consider that the Principles relevant to this complaint include Principles 2, 3 and 6 which say:

"Principle 2 – Skill, care and diligence – A firm must conduct its business with due skill, care and diligence.

Principle 3 – Management and control – A firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems.

Principle 6 – Customers' interests – A firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly."

I have carefully considered the relevant law and what this says about the application of the FCA's Principles. In R (British Bankers Association) v Financial Services Authority [2011] EWHC 999 (Admin) ("BBA") Ouseley J said at paragraph 162:

"The Principles are best understood as the ever present substrata to which the specific rules are added. The Principles always have to be complied with. The Specific rules do not supplant them and cannot be used to contradict them. They are but specific applications of them to the particular requirement they cover. The general notion that the specific rules can exhaust the application of the Principles is inappropriate. It cannot be an error of law for the Principles to augment specific rules.”

And at paragraph 77 of BBA Ouseley J said:

“Indeed, it is my view that it would be a breach of statutory duty for the Ombudsman to reach a view on a case without taking the Principles into account in deciding what would be fair and reasonable and what redress to afford. Even if no Principles had been produced by the FSA, the FOS would find it hard to fulfil its particular statutory duty without having regard to the sort of high level Principles which find expression in the Principles, whoever formulated them. They are of the essence of what is fair and reasonable, subject to the argument about their relationship to specific rules.”

In (R (Berkeley Burke SIPP Administration Ltd) v Financial Ombudsman Service [2018] EWHC 2878) (“BBSAL”), Berkeley Burke brought a judicial review claim challenging the decision of an ombudsman who had upheld a consumer’s complaint against it. The ombudsman considered the FCA Principles and good industry practice at the relevant time. He concluded that it was fair and reasonable for Berkeley Burke to have undertaken due diligence in respect of the investment before allowing it into the SIPP wrapper, and that if it had done so, it would have refused to accept the investment. The ombudsman found Berkeley Burke had therefore not complied with its regulatory obligations and had not treated its client fairly.

Jacobs J, having set out some paragraphs of BBA including paragraph 162 set out above, said (at paragraph 104 of BBSAL):

“These passages explain the overarching nature of the Principles. As the FCA correctly submitted in their written argument, the role of the Principles is not merely to cater for new or unforeseen circumstances. The judgment in BBA shows that they are, and indeed were always intended to be, of general application. The aim of the Principles based regulation described by Ouseley J. was precisely not to attempt to formulate a code covering all possible circumstances, but instead to impose general duties such as those set out in Principles 2 and 6.”

The BBSAL judgment also considers section 228 FSMA and the approach an ombudsman is to take when deciding a complaint. The judgment of Jacobs J in BBSAL upheld the lawfulness of the approach taken by the ombudsman in that complaint, which I have described above, and included the Principles and good industry practice at the relevant time as relevant considerations that were required to be taken into account.

As outlined above, Ouseley J in the BBA case held that it would be a breach of statutory duty if I were to reach a view on a complaint without taking the Principles into account in deciding what is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of a case. And, Jacobs J adopted a similar approach to the application of the Principles in BBSAL. So, the Principles are a relevant consideration here and I will consider them in the specific circumstances of this complaint.

Regulatory publications

The FCA (and its predecessor, the FSA) has issued a number of publications which remind SIPP operators of their obligations and set out how they might achieve the outcomes envisaged by the Principles:

- The 2009 and 2012 thematic review reports.
- The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance.
- The July 2014 “Dear CEO” letter.

I have set out below what I consider to be the key parts of the publications.

The 2009 Thematic Review Report

The 2009 report included the following statement:

“We are very clear that SIPP operators, regardless of whether they provide advice, are bound by Principle 6 of the Principles for Businesses (‘a firm must pay due regard to the interests of its customers and treat them fairly’) insofar as they are obliged to ensure the fair treatment of their customers. COBS 3.2.3(2) states that a member of a pension scheme is a ‘client’ for COBS purposes, and ‘Customer’ in terms of Principle 6 includes clients.

It is the responsibility of SIPP operators to continuously analyse the individual risks to themselves and their clients, with reference to the six TCF consumer outcomes.

We agree that firms acting purely as SIPP operators are not responsible for the SIPP advice given by third parties such as IFAs. However, we are also clear that SIPP operators cannot absolve themselves of any responsibility, and we would expect them to have procedures and controls, and to be gathering and analysing management information, enabling them to identify possible instances of financial crime and consumer detriment such as unsuitable SIPPs. Such instances could then be addressed in an appropriate way, for example by contacting the member to confirm the position, or by contacting the firm giving advice and asking for clarification. Moreover, while they are not responsible for the advice, there is a reputational risk to SIPP operators that facilitate the SIPPs that are unsuitable or detrimental to clients.

Of particular concern were firms whose systems and controls were weak and inadequate to the extent that they had not identified obvious potential instances of poor advice and/or potential financial crime. Depending on the facts and circumstances of individual cases, we may take enforcement action against SIPP operators who do not safeguard their clients’ interests in this respect, with reference to Principle 3 of the Principles for Businesses (‘a firm must take reasonable care to organise and control its affairs responsibly and effectively, with adequate risk management systems’).

The following are examples of measures that SIPP operators could consider, taken from examples of good practice that we observed and suggestions we have made to firms:

- Confirming, both initially and on an ongoing basis, that intermediaries that advise clients are authorised and regulated by the FSA, that they have the appropriate permissions to give the advice they are providing to the firm’s clients, and that they do not appear on the FSA website listing warning notices.
- Having Terms of Business agreements governing relationships, and clarifying respective responsibilities, with intermediaries introducing SIPP business.

- Routinely recording and reviewing the type (i.e. the nature of the SIPP investment) and size of investments recommended by intermediaries that give advice and introduce clients to the firm, so that potentially unsuitable SIPPs can be identified.
- Being able to identify anomalous investments, e.g. unusually small or large transactions or more 'esoteric' investments such as unquoted shares, together with the intermediary that introduced the business. This would enable the firm to seek appropriate clarification, e.g. from the client or their adviser, if it is concerned about the suitability of what was recommended.
- Requesting copies of the suitability reports provided to clients by the intermediary giving advice. While SIPP operators are not responsible for advice, having this information would enhance the firm's understanding of its clients, making the facilitation of unsuitable SIPPs less likely.
- Routinely identifying instances of execution-only clients who have signed disclaimers taking responsibility for their investment decisions, and gathering and analysing data regarding the aggregate volume of such business.
- Identifying instances of clients waiving their cancellation rights, and the reasons for this."

The later publications

In the October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance, the FCA states:

"This guide, originally published in September 2009, has been updated to give firms further guidance to help meet the regulatory requirements. These are not new or amended requirements, but a reminder of regulatory responsibilities that became a requirement in April 2007.

All firms, regardless of whether they do or do not provide advice must meet Principle 6 and treat customers fairly. COBS 3.2.3(2) is clear that a member of a pension scheme is a "client" for SIPP operators and so is a customer under Principle 6. It is a SIPP operator's responsibility to assess its business with reference to our six TCF consumer outcomes."

The October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance also set out the following:

"Relationships between firms that advise and introduce prospective members and SIPP operators

Examples of good practice we observed during our work with SIPP operators include the following:

- Confirming, both initially and on an ongoing basis, that: introducers that advise clients are authorised and regulated by the FCA; that they have the appropriate permissions to give the advice they are providing; neither the firm, nor its approved persons are on the list of prohibited individuals or cancelled firms and have a clear disciplinary history; and that the firm does not appear on the FCA website listings for un-authorised business warnings.
- Having terms of business agreements that govern relationships and clarify the responsibilities of those introducers providing SIPP business to a firm.

- Understanding the nature of the introducers' work to establish the nature of the firm, what their business objectives are, the types of clients they deal with, the levels of business they conduct and expect to introduce, the types of investments they recommend and whether they use other SIPP operators. Being satisfied that they are appropriate to deal with.
- Being able to identify irregular investments, often indicated by unusually small or large transactions; or higher risk investments such as unquoted shares which may be illiquid. This would enable the firm to seek appropriate clarification, for example from the prospective member or their adviser, if it has any concerns.
- Identifying instances when prospective members waive their cancellation rights and the reasons for this.

Although the members' advisers are responsible for the SIPP investment advice given, as a SIPP operator the firm has a responsibility for the quality of the SIPP business it administers. Examples of good practice we have identified include:

- conducting independent verification checks on members to ensure the information they are being supplied with, or that they are providing the firm with, is authentic and meets the firm's procedures and are not being used to launder money
- having clear terms of business agreements in place which govern relationships and clarify responsibilities for relationships with other professional bodies such as solicitors and accountants, and
- using non-regulated introducer checklists which demonstrate the SIPP operators have considered the additional risks involved in accepting business from non-regulated introducers"

In relation to due diligence the October 2013 finalised SIPP operator guidance said:

"Due diligence

Principle 2 of the FCA's Principles for Businesses requires all firms to conduct their business with due skill, care and diligence. All firms should ensure that they conduct and retain appropriate and sufficient due diligence (for example, checking and monitoring introducers as well as assessing that investments are appropriate for personal pension schemes) to help them justify their business decisions. In doing this SIPP operators should consider:

- ensuring that all investments permitted by the scheme are permitted by HMRC, or where a tax charge is incurred, that charge is identifiable, HMRC is informed and the tax charge paid
- periodically reviewing the due diligence the firm undertakes in respect of the introducers that use their scheme and, where appropriate enhancing the processes that are in place in order to identify and mitigate any risks to the members and the scheme
- having checks which may include, but are not limited to:
 - ensuring that introducers have the appropriate permissions, qualifications and skills to introduce different types of business to the firm, and

- undertaking additional checks such as viewing Companies House records, identifying connected parties and visiting introducers
- ensuring all third-party due diligence that the firm uses or relies on has been independently produced and verified
- good practices we have identified in firms include having a set of benchmarks, or minimum standards, with the purpose of setting the minimum standard the firm is prepared to accept to either deal with introducers or accept investments, and
- ensuring these benchmarks clearly identify those instances that would lead a firm to decline the proposed business, or to undertake further investigations such as instances of potential pension liberation, investments that may breach HMRC tax-relievable investments and non-standard investments that have not been approved by the firm”

The July 2014 “Dear CEO” letter provides a further reminder that the Principles apply and an indication of the FCA’s expectations about the kinds of practical steps a SIPP operator might reasonably take to achieve the outcomes envisaged by the Principles.

The “Dear CEO” letter also sets out how a SIPP operator might meet its obligations in relation to investment due diligence. It says those obligations could be met by:

- Correctly establishing and understanding the nature of an investment
- Ensuring that an investment is genuine and not a scam, or linked to fraudulent activity, money-laundering or pensions liberation
- Ensuring that an investment is safe/secure (meaning that custody of assets is through a reputable arrangement, and any contractual agreements are correctly drawn-up and legally enforceable)
- Ensuring that an investment can be independently valued, both at point of purchase and subsequently
- Ensuring that an investment is not impaired (for example that previous investors have received income if expected, or that any investment providers are credit worthy etc)

I acknowledge that the 2009 report (and the 2012 report and the “Dear CEO” letter) are not formal guidance (whereas the 2013 finalised guidance is). However, I don’t think the fact that the reports and “Dear CEO” letter didn’t constitute formal (i.e. statutory) guidance means their importance or relevance should be underestimated.

The publications provide a reminder that the Principles for Businesses apply and are an indication of the kinds of things a SIPP operator might do to ensure it is treating its customers fairly and to produce the outcomes envisaged by the Principles. In that respect, these publications also go some way to indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice at the relevant time. I’m therefore satisfied it’s appropriate to take them into account.

I don't think the fact that the later publications post-date the events that are the subject of this complaint mean that the examples of good industry practice they provide were not good practice at the time of the relevant events. The later publications were published after the events complained about, but the Principles that underpin them existed throughout, as did the obligation to act in accordance with those Principles.

It is clear from the text of the 2009 and 2012 reports, (and the "Dear CEO" letter published in 2014), that the regulator expected SIPP operators to have incorporated the recommended good industry practices into the conduct of their business already. So, whilst the regulators' comments suggest some industry participants' understanding of how the standards shaped what was expected of SIPP operators changed over time, it is clear the standards themselves had not changed.

I am required to take into account good industry practice at the relevant time. And, as mentioned, the publications indicate what I consider amounts to good industry practice at the relevant time.

That doesn't mean that in considering what is fair and reasonable, I will only consider Options' actions with these documents in mind. The reports, Dear CEO letter and guidance gave non-exhaustive examples of good industry practice. They did not say the suggestions given were the limit of what a SIPP operator should do. As the annex to the "Dear CEO" letter notes, what should be done to meet regulatory obligations will depend on the circumstances.

To be clear, I do not say the Principles or the publications obliged Options to ensure the pension transfer was suitable for Mr M. It is accepted Options was not required to give advice to Mr M, and could not give advice. And I accept the publications don't alter the meaning of, or the scope of, the Principles. But they are evidence of what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time, which would bring about the outcomes envisaged by the Principles.

The Adams court cases and COBS2.1.1R

I've taken account of the judgment of the High Court in the case of Adams v Options SIPP [2020] EWHC 1229 (Ch) and the Court of Appeal judgment in Adams v Options UK Personal Pensions LLP [2021] EWCA Civ 474.

I've considered whether these judgments mean that the Principles should not be taken into account in deciding this case. And, I am of the view they do not. In the High Court case, HHJ Dight did not consider the application of the Principles and they did not form part of the pleadings submitted by Mr Adams. One of the main reasons why HHJ Dight found that the judgment of Jacobs J in BBSAL was not of direct relevance to the case before him was because "the specific regulatory provisions which the learned judge in Berkeley Burke was asked to consider are not those which have formed the basis of the claimant's case before me."

Likewise, the Principles were not considered by the Court of Appeal. So, the Adams judgments say nothing about the application of the FCA's Principles to the ombudsman's consideration of a complaint.

I acknowledge that COBS2.1.1R (A firm must act honestly, fairly and professionally in accordance with the best interests of its client) overlaps with certain of the Principles and that this rule was considered by HHJ Dight in the High Court case. Mr Adams pleaded that Options SIPP owed him a duty to comply with COBS 2.1.1R, a breach of which, he argued, was actionable pursuant to section 138(D) of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000

(‘FSMA’) (“the COBS claim”). HHJ Dight rejected this claim and found that Options SIPP had complied with the best interests rule on the facts of Mr Adams’ case.

Although the Court of Appeal ultimately overturned HHJ Dight’s judgment, it rejected that part of Mr Adams’ appeal that related to HHJ Dight’s dismissal of the COBS claim on the basis that Mr Adams was seeking to advance a case that was radically different to that found in his initial pleadings. The Court found that this part of Mr Adams’ appeal did not so much represent a challenge to the grounds on which HHJ Dight had dismissed the COBS claim, but rather was an attempt to put forward an entirely new case.

I note that, in Adams v Options, HHJ Dight found that the factual context of a case would inform the extent of the duty imposed by COBS 2.1.1R. HHJ Dight said at para 148:

“In my judgment in order to identify the extent of the duty imposed by Rule 2.1.1 one has to identify the relevant factual context, because it is apparent from the submissions of each of the parties that the context has an impact on the ascertainment of the extent of the duty. The key fact, perhaps composite fact, in the context is the agreement into which the parties entered, which defined their roles and functions in the transaction.”

However, the facts in Mr M’s case are very different from those in Mr Adams’ cases. There are also significant differences between the breaches of COBS 2.1.1R alleged by Mr Adams and from the issues in Mr M’s complaint. The breaches were summarised in paragraph 120 of the Court of Appeal judgment. In particular, HHJ Dight considered the contractual relationship between the parties in the context of Mr Adams’ pleaded breaches of COBS 2.1.1R that happened after the contract was entered into. In Mr M’s complaint, I am considering whether Options ought to have identified that the introductions from Caledonian involved a risk of consumer detriment and, if so, whether it ought to have ceased accepting introductions from Caledonian prior to entering into a contract with Mr M.

I think it is also important to emphasise that I must determine this complaint by reference to what is, in my opinion, fair and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case. And, in doing that, I am required to take into account relevant considerations which include: law and regulations; regulators’ rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to have been good industry practice at the relevant time. This is a clear and relevant point of difference between this complaint and the judgments in Adams v Options SIPP. That was a legal claim which was defined by the formal pleadings in Mr Adams’ statement of case.

To be clear, I have proceeded on the understanding Options was not obliged – and not able – to give advice to Mr M on the suitability of its SIPP, the pension transfer or the subsequent investments made for him personally. But I am satisfied Options’ obligations included deciding whether to accept particular investments into its SIPP and/or whether to accept introductions of business from particular businesses.

I note for completeness that Options wasn’t granted permission to appeal the Court of Appeal judgment to the Supreme Court.

Section 27/28 FSMA

The Court of Appeal overturned the High Court judgment in Adams on the basis of the claim pursuant to S27 FSMA.

S27 FSMA provides that an agreement between an authorised person and another party, which is otherwise properly made in the course of the authorised person’s regulated activity, is unenforceable as against that other party if it is made “in consequence of something said or done by another person (“the third party”) in the course of a regulated activity carried on by the third party in contravention of the general prohibition”.

S27(2) provides that the other party is entitled to recover:

“(a) any money or other property paid or transferred by him under the agreement; and

(b) compensation for any loss sustained by him as a result of having parted with it.”

s28(3) FSMA provides that “If the court is satisfied that it is just and equitable in the circumstances of the case, it may allow—

a. the agreement to be enforced; or

b. money and property paid or transferred under the agreement to be retained.”

The General Prohibition is set out in S19 FSMA. It stipulates that:

“No person may carry on a regulated activity in the United Kingdom, or purport to do so, unless he is –

a) an authorised person; or

b) an exempt person.”

In Adams, the Court of Appeal concluded that the unauthorised introducer of the SIPP had carried out activities in contravention of the General Prohibition, and so S27 FSMA applied. It further concluded that it would not be just and equitable to nonetheless allow the agreement to be enforced (or the money retained) under the discretion afforded to it by S28(3) FSMA.

At paragraph 115 of the judgment, the Court set out five reasons for reaching this conclusion. The first two of these were:

“i) A key aim of FSMA is consumer protection. It proceeds on the basis that, while consumers can to an extent be expected to bear responsibility for their own decisions, there is a need for regulation, among other things to safeguard consumers from their own folly. That much reduces the force of Mr [redacted]’s contentions that Mr Adams caused his own losses and misled Carey;

ii) While SIPP providers were not barred from accepting introductions from unregulated sources, section 27 of FSMA was designed to throw risks associated with doing so onto the providers. Authorised persons are at risk of being unable to enforce agreements and being required to return money and other property and to pay compensation regardless of whether they had had knowledge of third parties’ contraventions of the general prohibition;”

The other three reasons, in summary, were:

- The volume and nature of business being introduced by the introducer was such as to put Options on notice of the danger that the introducer was recommending clients to invest in the investments and set up Options SIPPs to that end. There were therefore reasons for Options to be concerned about the possibility of the introducer advising on investments within the meaning of article 53 of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (Regulated Activities) Order 2001 (“the RAO”).

- Options was aware that: contrary to what the introducer had previously said, it was receiving high commission from the investment provider, there were indications that the introducer was offering consumers “cashback” and one of those running the introducer was subject to a FCA warning notice.
- The investment did not proceed until after the time by which Options had reasons for concern and so it was open to Options to decline the investment, or at least explore the position with Mr Adams, but it did not do so.

I shall address later in this decision how I consider S27 FSMA to be an additional and alternative ground upon which this complaint should be upheld. But before that, I'll address below what I think Options should have concluded from the information it had on Caledonian and what this should have meant for Mr M's proposed pension transfer and investment.

What did Options obligations mean in practice?

In this case, the business Options was conducting was its operation of SIPPs. I am satisfied that meeting its regulatory obligations when conducting this business would include deciding whether to accept or reject particular investments and/or referrals of business.

The regulatory publications provided some examples of good industry practice observed by the FSA and FCA during their work with SIPP operators including being satisfied that a particular introducer is appropriate to deal with and a particular investment is an appropriate one for a SIPP.

I'm satisfied that, to meet its regulatory obligations, when conducting its business, Options was required to consider whether to accept or reject particular referrals of business, with the Principles in mind.

The due diligence carried out by Options on Caledonian and what it should have concluded

I have considered what a level of due diligence consistent with Options' regulatory obligations and the standards of good practice at the time ought to have revealed. And what, with those same obligations and standards in mind, Options ought to have concluded about Caledonian. And, when doing this, I have taken into account the evidence I have mentioned above.

As set out above, the 2009 Thematic Review Report deals specifically with the relationships between SIPP operators and introducers or “intermediaries”. And it gives non-exhaustive examples of good practice. In my view, to meet these standards, and its regulatory obligations, set by the Principles, Options ought to have identified a significant risk of consumer detriment arising from business brought about by a business introducing consumers to Options which appeared to be specialising in pension transfers from one occupational pension scheme purporting to be on an execution only (that is, non-advised) basis. And so Options ought to have ensured it thought very carefully about accepting applications from Caledonian and, therefore, Mr M.

I think it is fair and reasonable to say such consideration should have involved Options getting a full understanding of the business model of the introducer, the nature of the investments to be made and putting a clear agreement in place between it and the introducer and ensuring careful thought was given to the risk generally posed to consumers by the introducer.

I acknowledge Options did take some steps – initially and on an ongoing basis – which it could be argued did amount to good practice consistent with its regulatory obligations.

But I think, with its regulatory obligations and good industry practice in mind, Options ought to have done more at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian and didn't, in any event, draw fair and reasonable conclusions from the information available to it by the time of Mr M's application. Had Options done more at the outset and/or drawn fair and reasonable conclusions from what it knew, it ought in my view to have concluded that it shouldn't accept Mr M's application from Caledonian.

I've set out my reasons for this in more detail below.

Should Options have been aware that Caledonian was providing advice to Mr M?

In my view, acting fairly and reasonably, including a reasonable level of investigation and due diligence on Caledonian's operation, and based on the information available to it, Options ought to have concluded at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian and certainly before the conclusion of Mr M's application, that Caledonian was providing advice as to the benefits of transferring his pension to the SIPP.

At the very least there was information that should have caused it to suspect that advice was being given and it should've carried out further investigation into that. If it had done so, I believe it likely that it would have discovered that Mr M had been advised by Caledonian to transfer his pension.

Taking account of the available evidence, I consider that Caledonian did provide advice to Mr M as to the benefits of transferring his pension, selecting the SIPP to do so and the investment with Business C and JBL to follow.

Caledonian's representatives promised a greater return on Mr M's pension than he would obtain if he were to stick with the armed forces scheme. I consider Mr M's testimony to be credible. There would have been no other reason for Mr M to consider a transfer to the Carey SIPP, the Business C / JBL investment or anything else connected with this transaction had he not received advice from Caledonian to do so.

I consider it to be highly unlikely that Mr M came to his own conclusion to make this transfer and the subsequent investment. Mr M wasn't financially knowledgeable. And entering into an execution only relationship with Options would only have happened if he'd been advised to do so.

Options argue that it treated Caledonian as a business which was not giving advice. It has submitted that, as far as it was aware, it was receiving introductions from Caledonian on an execution only (non-advised) basis.

Options' terms of business with Caledonian was signed in September 2012; however, Options says this was provided to Caledonian in March 2012. I note the terms made it clear that no advice would be given by Caledonian:

"The Business Introducer undertakes that they will not provide advice as defined by the Act in relation to the SIPP – for the avoidance of doubt this includes reference to advice on the selection of The SIPP Operator, contributions, transfer of benefits, taking benefits and HMRC rules:"

I also note on the SIPP application form which was signed and dated by Mr M in February 2013, it was stated that:

"This Form should be used if you are a client establishing a SIPP without advice. You have made this decision independently and are aware of the implications of this decision".

And:

"As you do not have a Financial Adviser, your investment choices are your sole responsibility. You will instruct us and we will act on those instructions as long as it is an accepted investment in the Carey Pension Scheme."

However, there is a significant degree of inconsistency between these documents and other documentary evidence.

As highlighted above, in Mr M's Options member declaration that he signed in February 2013, it was confirmed that:

"I confirm that I have received full and appropriate advice from Caledonian International and following this advice I wish to proceed with the transfer."

The member's declaration is in clear conflict with the SIPP application form. As a minimum, these contradictions should have alerted Options to the possibility that Mr M may very well have been given advice – and therefore further steps to clarify this were required. I think that the fact that there are conflicting statements in the documentation just lends to the assertion that Options' attention to detail was lacking in so far as what was happening between its clients and Caledonian went.

If Options had undertaken a reasonable level of due diligence it should have been aware that there was a significant risk that advice had been given to Mr M to transfer his pension by Caledonian. Similarly, the available evidence also shows that Options should have concluded at the start of its relationship with Caledonian that it may be providing advice as to the benefits of transferring pension.

I would also comment that it is unusual for individuals such as Mr M, with no particular financial understanding or background, to want to carry out what is quite a complex transfer of occupational pension scheme benefits without receiving advice or a recommendation. Given all the evidence, I believe Options should have been aware that there was significant risk that advice was being provided by an unregulated business.

Had Options sought clarification from Mr M, which would have been a reasonable course of action in the circumstances, I think it would likely have been made aware he was receiving advice from Caledonian. Alternatively Options could have simply declined to proceed with the application – given the obvious conflicts (discussed above) about the provision of advice.

So I think Options ought reasonably to have been aware advice was being given to Mr M by Caledonian.

I also think it was reasonably clear from the outset of Options' relationship with Caledonian that Caledonian's business model meant there was a risk that advice would be given on the merits of transferring out of the armed forces scheme to an Options' SIPP and on the investments to be made within that SIPP.

In March 2012, Mr C described Caledonian's business model to Options. It was recorded:

“He was (sic) preferred adviser (my emphasis) for the Armed Forces occupational pension scheme for individuals who had left the armed forces and were taking positions in close security work in places such as Iraq, Afghanistan/Iran etc....and also anti-piracy positions...”

[Mr C] himself was not a regulated adviser, he was a consultant to these clients and advised them on their armed forces transfers only (my emphasis), he was a qualified accountant and was a member of the Chartered Institute of Accountants.

He was currently putting them into an international... Bond (my emphasis), the underlying investments were regulated.”*

This describes an advice process. It indicates that Caledonian was advising consumers on transfers out of armed forces schemes and “putting them into” an investment bond. At that time, a different investment provider was being used, although by the time of Mr M’s investment he was directed to invest with Business C and JBL. I think the only reasonable conclusion which could be drawn from the above description was that advice was likely being given. Given these statements, it would be difficult to imagine a situation where Caledonian were giving that kind of tailored guidance without giving advice on the merits of transferring.

In the ‘Non-Regulated Introducer Profile’ signed and dated in March 2012, Caledonian’s sales process was described as:

“Referral – Visit – Analysis – Visit”

That clearly involved more than just a simple introduction. It is a description that also supports my finding that Caledonian were involved in an advice process.

At the very least this should have led to further questions being asked by Options of Caledonian and Mr M. In terms of Mr M, a reasonable line of enquiry would have been to ask him if he thought he was receiving advice as to whether to set up a SIPP and/or transfer his pension benefits to it and/or then make subsequent investments within the SIPP. And I think given Mr M’s subsequent testimony, the answers to those questions would have led to the conclusion that advice was being given.

On 26 April 2013 an Options employee in its compliance department sent an email to a number of Options employees. She raised concerns about Caledonian’s business practices. She said:

“We have a responsibility to proactively monitor our distribution channels to ensure our products do not end up with customers for whom it is not suitable. Based on recent correspondence with Caledonian I am increasingly concerned by their business practices and therefore believe we should review our relationship with them and the business they have introduced. I will arrange a meeting for next week to discuss. In the meantime we need to determine the answers to the questions below to help facilitate our discussions.”

As I’ve set out there were a couple of different responses to those questions. But of critical importance is that following the ensuing internal discussion, Options asked Caledonian, on 10 May 2013, directly whether it was giving advice.

Although we haven’t been provided with a copy of the actual response to this e-mail, a discussion of Caledonian’s responses to these questions led Options to conclude:

“Following a detailed review of the process and documentation concerns were raised regarding whether the clients could be deemed to be receiving advice through an unregulated entity.

Following a request for further clarification on these points we have not been able to satisfy ourselves that this is not the case.”

And this effectively ended the relationship with Caledonian.

In my view these are investigations and questions, which Options, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good practice at the time, ought to have been undertaking or asking at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian. The need to ask these questions was clear based on the information available to Options before Mr M was introduced to it. Options clearly had its own concerns about Caledonian's operation in 2013 – and this was something that it should and could have explored and interrogated much earlier and certainly before accepting Mr M's introduction and making the investments. This is particularly the case given the timing of Mr M's application and subsequent investment was the same time these investigations and discussions were taking place. The investment was indeed made after Options ceased accepting introductions from Caledonian.

I believe the knowledge that Caledonian was providing advice – whether acquired at the outset of the relationship with Caledonian or before or during the course of Mr M's application – should've been a red flag and given Options significant cause for concern. I say this because it suggests a number of risks/issues, including:

- The potential for breaches of the Principles, regulations and/or law.
- There being no evidence to show Caledonian had competency to give advice, particularly with respect to pension transfers.
- There being nothing to show proper advice processes were being followed.
- The risk of obvious significant detriment to large numbers of individuals to forgo guaranteed pension benefits.

I think these are all things which, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good industry practice, Options should have factored into its thinking.

Where were the activities taking place?

I haven't seen evidence that, prior to May 2013, Options established where Caledonian would be conducting business. It was therefore in no position to know what, if any, regulatory regimes applied.

The business profile completed at the outset of Options' relationship with Caledonian records that Caledonian said its clients, “were generally still resident in UK but some were now living abroad in various countries such as Thailand, Germany, Spain etc.”. The introducer profile completed at the outset of the relationship records that Caledonian had branches in Chile, Peru, Columbia, Argentina, Brazil and Switzerland.

Options noted in 2013 that, as to the question of where Caledonian was meeting with clients and its regulatory status, the position was, “unknown”.

So it is fair to say Options wasn't in a position to know whether Caledonian was following any applicable regulations and laws as it simply didn't know where it was carrying out its activities or, at the very least, was aware the activities were potentially being carried out in several different jurisdictions. And then it didn't take sufficient steps to ascertain what regulations and laws applied in each of those countries and whether Caledonian was acting within them.

In this case, I think Options should've been particularly concerned about whether advice was being given (or any other regulated activity carried on) in the UK as Caledonian wasn't authorised by the FSA or, later, the FCA.

On the Non-Regulated Introducer Profile form completed in March 2012, in response to the question asking what measures were in place to "ensure the Firm engage legal advice on the activities it carries out to ensure regulated activities are not carried out?", the following answer was given by Caledonian:

"Majority of business carried out in unregulated jurisdictions but where regulations apply we are licensed to carry out our activities."

But, as mentioned above, Options was also made aware that "generally" consumers who would be introduced to it were UK residents. So it's not clear how the Caledonian business model worked logistically - how could Options be satisfied, on a general basis, that the relevant activities would not take place in the UK? I think Options should've been alive to the risk that in some of the cases at least, some of the activities might take place in the UK.

Rights under a personal pension scheme are a security and a relevant investment. Under Article 25(1) RAO, making arrangements for another person to buy and sell these types of investments is a regulated activity. And under Article 25(2) RAO, making arrangements with a view to a person who participates in the arrangements buying and selling these types of investments is also a regulated activity.

So, in this case if Caledonian made arrangements – i.e. assisting in the completion of the SIPP application form for onward investment with Business C and JBL in the UK, that would be a regulated activity. It is clear Caledonian did undertake this activity in this case and so Options should have been aware a regulated activity had been undertaken by Caledonian in the UK even if it assumed any advice had been given in Jordan or otherwise overseas.

Furthermore, if Options accepted the advice was given in Jordan or overseas, I've not seen any evidence to show it checked that Caledonian had any required authority to undertake this activity in Jordan. And there's no evidence that Mr M had any connection to Jordan or ever met anyone from Caledonian there. Indeed, it appears that he met with Caledonian's representative in the UK.

Caledonian's competence to undertake pension transfers

The proposed business model involved former members of the armed forces who worked in security related jobs in hazardous areas. The business model was not one involving, say, former financial advisers or other finance professionals.

There is therefore no reason to think that the typical client Caledonian was proposing on introducing had a good level of understanding of pensions or were in a position to work out for themselves if a pension transfer was in their best interests. They would be reliant on Caledonian's advice.

The introductions involved transfers out of a defined benefit pension scheme into a UK SIPP for investment with Business C / JBL. The transfer of defined benefit (final salary) pensions are usually not in the customer's best interests, are complex and present a variety of consequences and matters which the ordinary individual would be hard pressed to understand without professional financial advice. Those giving such advice in the UK are required by the FCA to pass specialist exams, reflecting the risks and complexities involved. Options, as a provider of SIPPs, would or ought to have been aware of this.

Given that Options knew that the intention was to introduce around 50 individuals a month, I think it's fair to say Options should've satisfied itself that there was no risk of detriment to these consumers. In any event, as I will refer to later in this decision, it should have had concerns that a small business such as Caledonian could competently deal with such a volume of business.

However, the information Caledonian disclosed to Options revealed that it didn't have any particular qualifications or expertise in pension transfers.

On the Non-regulated Introducer Profile document completed in March 2012, under the section headed Training and Information, the following response was given to a question as to what training was provided to its agents:

"Ongoing product training and accompanied meetings."

In response to a question about the specific pension training that was delivered to its agents the answer given was:

"Visits to providers directly."

There is no mention of any type of professional qualification (whether that be in the UK or any other territorial jurisdiction) relating to pensions.

On the undated Overseas Introducer Proforma Document, the section headed Professional Qualification was recorded as 'high risk'. The notes said that:

"No qualifications documented other than meeting notes from March 2012 where [Mr C] stated he was a qualified accountant and member of Chartered Institute of Accountants."

I think this demonstrates that Options didn't know if any of Caledonian's staff had any qualifications to give advice on occupational pension scheme transfers.

So Options was aware that Caledonian's employees didn't likely have any qualifications to give advice as to pensions. And it seems that any steps to ascertain whether any qualifications were held would have revealed they weren't. The steps taken in May 2013, where Options belatedly made enquiries of Caledonian, which as outlined above I think it should have actioned much earlier, and certainly before accepting Mr M's application, resulted in Options requiring all the transfers to be reviewed by a UK FCA regulated adviser.

To my mind, this indicates that when Options did ask further questions about Caledonian's expertise in dealing with pensions, it would appear that not only did it become aware that Caledonian's staff did not possess adequate expertise but it also took steps to try and address that.

So, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good practice, Options should've concluded at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian, or at the very least by the time of Mr M's application, that Caledonian was proposing to give advice to bring about a large volume of business relating to a complex product for which it didn't have the appropriate qualifications.

The transfer process

As mentioned above, a defined benefit transfer is a complex transaction. It also involves many risks, and potentially the loss of significant guaranteed benefits. For this reason, advice on such transactions is tightly regulated in the UK and there are standards of good practice that those giving the advice are expected to follow. This means several steps need to be taken as part of the advice process and documentation such as fact-finds, suitability reports, transfer value analysis reports (TVAS), and illustrations, all of which generally feature in the advice process. The purpose is to ensure any advice given takes into account all relevant factors, is suitable, and the recipient of the advice is in a fully informed position, where they understand the benefits they are giving up and the risks associated with the transfer.

I have seen no evidence to show Caledonian followed such a process. In my opinion it would have been fair and reasonable for Options to have identified this as a clear risk of consumer detriment – particularly given that Caledonian's starting point appears to have been that the consumers it dealt with would be transferring out of the defined benefit scheme.

I do not say Options should have checked any advice that was given – but it should have taken steps to ascertain if a reasonable process was in place and consumers were taking these steps on an informed basis. And I think if it had undertaken such steps and carried out even a cursory investigation of the individuals being introduced to it, then it would have become aware no reasonable process was in place and consumers were not fully informed of the risks before agreeing to make the transfer to the SIPP. As discussed, I think it would have also quickly discovered that at least some of the individuals being introduced to it, including Mr M, had received what amounted to advice about the transfer from an unregulated introducer. And that this advice may well have been provided, at least partially, in the UK.

It seems Options took these steps, to an extent, belatedly in May 2013. And, in common with the other steps taken in May 2013 that appears to have led it to the conclusion that what was in place was insufficient. However, acting fairly and reasonably to meet its regulatory obligations and good practice, Options should have concluded at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian, or at the very least by the time of Mr M's application and subsequent investment, that there was a significant risk of consumer detriment, that Caledonian didn't have a process in place which supported suitable advice being given or that ensured consumers were fully informed of the risks.

Other issues Options ought to have identified and considered

There were also further issues Options ought to have identified and considered, based on what it knew or ought to have known by the time of Mr M's application. In summary, Options should've considered that:

- The high volume of business being proposed and brought about by Caledonian suggested a risk of consumer detriment.
- Caledonian was typically taking a high level of commission, which may not have been disclosed.
- Caledonian failed to provide its company accounts, despite repeated requests for copies of them from Options.

Volume of business

Prior to accepting Mr M's introduction, Options was told that Caledonian would be introducing about 50 applications a month. I also note that Caledonian introduced around 40 applications a month over the course of its relationship with Options and Options would therefore have been aware a similar volume was being seen in practice.

It's clear that Options kept a good level of management information about the number and nature of introductions that Caledonian had made. I think this is an example of good practice. However, I don't think it was fair and reasonable to simply keep records rather than evaluating that information and taking steps based on it. As highlighted in the 2009 Thematic Review Report, the reason why the records are important is so that potentially unsuitable SIPP's can be identified.

I think that Options should have been concerned that such a high volume of introductions from only occupational pension schemes was being referred to it, and according to Options, on an execution only basis. As discussed above, as a professional in the pension industry, Options ought to have known about the following guidance in the FSA (later FCA's) handbook in 2012:

"COBS 19.1.6 G

When advising a retail client who is, or is eligible to be, a member of a defined benefits occupational pension scheme whether to transfer or opt out, a firm should start by assuming that a transfer or opt out will not be suitable (my emphasis). A firm should only then consider a transfer or opt out to be suitable if it can clearly demonstrate, on contemporary evidence, that the transfer or opt-out is in the client's best interests."

I accept this aims to define the expectation of a regulated financial adviser when determining suitability of a pension transfer, but it emphasises the regulator's concern about the potential detriment such a transaction could expose a consumer to. And, being a regulated firm with a requirement to ensure its clients were being treated fairly, I'd expect Options to have been familiar with the guidance contained in COBS – even if it didn't apply to it.

Caledonian's business model, as set out to Options, appears to run counter to this, insofar as the starting point appeared to be an assumption that the transfer was suitable. When considered alongside the high volume of business being brought about by Caledonian, Options, acting fairly and reasonably, should've identified a significant risk of consumer detriment.

Options ought to have been aware that the introduction of such a large volume of applications for pension transfers (an estimated 50 a month), including Mr M's application, on a non-advised basis was unusual. I think Options should have been concerned about the motivations and competence of Caledonian and have had adequate risk management controls in place to have allowed it to conclude very quickly that there was a high probability that much, if not all, of the business introduced by Caledonian (which was transfers from occupational pension schemes) carried with it a high risk of significant consumer detriment.

I don't believe Options was fulfilling its duties under the Principles by accepting introductions on that basis, and with that knowledge, without interrogating the matter further.

Commission

I also think the level of commission that was being paid to Caledonian on the majority of applications made was anomalous, given what limited service Caledonian said to Options it was providing. It appears Caledonian was typically taking around 7% of the transfer amount in commission and Options was told that at the outset of its relationship. Options also paid Caledonian a fee from the transferred amount. In Mr M's case, a fee of £700 was payable to Caledonian from the SIPP. It isn't clear, from the evidence I have seen, that Mr M was made aware of the level of any commission at the time.

In my opinion, the commission paid on what was a small pension pot, was very high for an 'introduction' and should've given Options cause for concern, given the nature of the business being introduced. As noted earlier in my findings, there is no evidence to show Caledonian carried out any of the usual work associated with a defined benefit transfer that would justify such a fee. Nor have I seen any other evidence to show there was any justification for such a high level of commission in the circumstances. I think this level of commission ought to have been another cause for Options to be concerned that Caledonian was putting its own interests ahead of the interests of the customers.

Overall, when considered alongside the high volumes of near identical introductions of business being made by Caledonian, I think this level of commission raises questions about the motives and role of Caledonian and shows an additional risk of consumer detriment.

Caledonian's Accounts

I note that Options made repeated requests for Caledonian's accounts. It sent several emails to Caledonian between March and August 2012. Options also explained in its email of 23 March 2012 that in order to comply with its own compliance procedures this was needed.

Options started accepting introductions (including Mr M's) from Caledonian having not received its requested company accounts or the passports of all its directors. This is something that was discussed in August 2012 by Options employees as being required. The 'undated document', but likely of March 2013 - the "Overseas Introducer Assessment Proforma" - set out that Options had noted that Caledonian had no UK branch or EEA regulatory details and it could not discover how long it had been trading. It also noted that it still hadn't received any accounts from Caledonian.

But I haven't seen any evidence that the accounts were ever provided. In my opinion, it is fair and reasonable that Options should have met its own standards and should have checked Caledonian's accounts at the outset before accepting any business from it. And, based on Caledonian's conduct, it seems very unlikely accounts would ever have been forthcoming.

Caledonian's reluctance to provide basic information should also have been a further factor which ought to have led Options to question whether it should enter into or continue a relationship with Caledonian. It calls into question the competence and motivations of Caledonian and the ability of Caledonian to organise its affairs. It also meant Options was missing information which might be critical to the decision as to whether to enter into business with Caledonian. It isn't clear why Options accepted introductions without it.

It's also notable that Options accepted and set up Mr M's SIPP when it was still waiting for this information from Caledonian.

In conclusion

Taking all of the above into consideration – individually and cumulatively – I think in the circumstances it is fair and reasonable for me to conclude that Options ought reasonably to have concluded, had it complied with its regulatory obligations which required it to conduct sufficient due diligence on Caledonian before accepting business from it, and to act on information received about the conduct of Caledonian before continuing to accept business from it, that it should not accept business from Caledonian, including Mr M's.

I therefore conclude that it is fair and reasonable in the circumstances to say that Options shouldn't have accepted Mr M's application from Caledonian.

I say this because, as discussed in more detail above:

- Options says that at the outset of its relationship with Caledonian the arrangement was to accept introductions on the basis they would be non-advised/execution only. But the evidence should have caused it to question that, including in the case of Mr M.
- Options says it acted on the basis that all of the introductions made by Caledonian would be made so that individuals could transfer pensions from an occupational defined benefit pension scheme.
- Options was aware that there was to be a significant number of such introductions – around 50 a month.
- Options should've undertaken a reasonable level of due diligence as to the introductions to be made and the introductions it was receiving. If it had done so, then it would have likely discovered that Caledonian was giving advice as to transferring pensions and the investments to follow, something Options says was not the basis on which it was to accept introductions.
- Options should've been aware that Caledonian was undertaking one or more regulated activities in the UK, without authorisation. And there was no evidence to show it was meeting any relevant regulations or laws, if activities were taking place outside the UK.
- Options should have been, or were, aware that Caledonian's staff didn't have the qualifications – and therefore expertise – to give advice on defined benefit scheme transfers.
- There was no evidence to show a proper advice process had been followed and Mr M was therefore not able to make a fully informed decision about the transfer.
- Caledonian was taking a very high level of fees and commission for what it said was an execution only service.
- Options hadn't obtained a reasonable level of information about Caledonian as a business before it started accepting introductions – and this persisted for most of its relationship with Caledonian.

Each of these points shows a high risk of potential consumer detriment, and calls into question the motivation and competency of Caledonian. So I think that, acting fairly and reasonably, Options should've declined to accept Mr M's application because of any of these points – and certainly should have done so when considering them cumulatively.

Did Options act fairly and reasonably in proceeding with Mr M's instructions?

In my view, for the reasons given, Options simply should've refused to accept Mr M's application. So things shouldn't have got beyond that. Had Options acted in accordance with its regulatory obligations and best practice, it's fair and reasonable in my view to conclude that it should not have accepted Mr M's application to open a SIPP.

I acknowledge Mr M was asked to sign an Options member's declaration and it would have put some reliance on that. I note this document does give clear warnings about the loss of benefits that would result in the transfer to the Options SIPP. The indemnities also sought to confirm that Mr M wouldn't hold Options responsible for any liability resulting from the investments.

But I don't think this document demonstrates Options acted fairly and reasonably when proceeding with Mr M's instructions.

For the reasons set out, I don't think Options should've accepted the application from Caledonian. So, Mr M shouldn't have got to the point of signing a member declaration as the business shouldn't have come about at all. Furthermore, asking Mr M to sign a declaration absolving Options of all its responsibilities when it ought to have known that Mr M's dealings with Caledonian were putting him at significant risk wasn't the fair and reasonable thing to do. I also note that the declaration was based on Mr M having "received full and appropriate advice from Caledonian International" where, for the reasons I have given, Options ought to have been aware Caledonian didn't have the competency to give such advice.

My remit is, of course, to make a decision on what I think is fair and reasonable in all the circumstances. And my view is that it's fair and reasonable to say that just asking Mr M to sign declarations wasn't an effective way for Options to meet its regulatory obligations to treat him fairly, given the concerns Options ought to have identified about his introduction.

I'm also satisfied that, had Options not accepted Mr M's application to open a SIPP introduced from Caledonian, the arrangement for Mr M wouldn't have come about in the first place, and the loss he suffered could've been avoided.

Mr M wasn't actively looking to do anything with his pension until he spoke with Caledonian. And Caledonian was clearly reliant on Options to facilitate things – but for Options' acceptance of the application, Mr M's business wouldn't have been able to proceed.

In any event, I think it's fair to say Mr M should simply have been unable to complete this transaction. I don't think any SIPP operator, acting properly, would have dealt with Caledonian.

Options might argue that another SIPP operator would've accepted Mr M's application, had it declined it. But I don't think it's fair and reasonable to say that Options shouldn't compensate Mr M for his loss on the basis of speculation that another SIPP operator would have made the same mistakes as I've found it did.

I think it's fair instead to assume that another SIPP provider would have complied with its regulatory obligations and good industry practice, and therefore wouldn't have accepted the application from Caledonian, or would have terminated the transaction before completion.

For all the reasons I've set out, I'm satisfied that it would not be fair to say Mr M's actions mean he should bear the loss arising as a result of Options' failings. In the circumstances, I am satisfied that Options should not have asked him to sign the declaration at all. For the reasons I have set out, I am satisfied that the application should never have been accepted in the first place.

S27 and S28 FSMA

Furthermore, I am satisfied S27 FSMA offers a further and alternative basis on which it would be fair and reasonable to conclude Mr M's complaint should be upheld. I'm satisfied that S27 FSMA applies here, as regulated activities were undertaken by Caledonian, in breach of the General Prohibition. So, Mr M is entitled to recover any money or other property paid or transferred by him under the agreement (i.e. the SIPP), as well as compensation for any loss suffered. I am also satisfied that, in the circumstances, a court would not exercise its discretion to allow the agreement to be enforced; or money paid or transferred under the agreement to be retained.

I have set out the key sections of S27 and S28 above and have considered them carefully, in full. In my view I need to apply a four-stage test to determine whether S27 applies and whether a court would exercise its discretion under S28, as follows:

1. Whether an unauthorised third-party was involved;
2. whether there is evidence that the third-party acted in breach of the General Prohibition in relation to the particular transaction and, if so;
3. whether the customer entered into an agreement with an authorised firm in consequence of something said or done by the unauthorised third-party in the course of its actions that contravened the General Prohibition; and
4. whether it is just and equitable for the agreement between the customer and the authorised firm to be enforced in any event.

Test 1 is clearly satisfied here – Caledonian was an unauthorised third party. Test 2 is also satisfied – for the reasons I have set out above, I am satisfied Caledonian carried out activities in breach of the General Prohibition – and any one regulated activity is sufficient for these purposes so this test would be met if Caledonian had only undertaken arranging (which, for the reasons I have set out, I do not think is the case as advice was clearly provided as well). Test 3 is satisfied too – the SIPP was opened in consequence of the advice given, and arrangements made, by Caledonian.

That brings me to the final test, 4. Having carefully considered this, I am satisfied a court would not conclude it is just and equitable for the agreement between Mr M and Options to be enforced in any event. I think very similar reasons to those mentioned by the Court of Appeal in the Adams case apply here:

- A key aim of FSMA is consumer protection. It proceeds on the basis that, while consumers can to an extent be expected to bear responsibility for their own decisions, there is a need for regulation, among other things to safeguard consumers from their own folly.
- While SIPP providers were not barred from accepting introductions from unregulated sources, section 27 of FSMA was designed to throw risks associated with doing so onto the providers. Authorised persons are at risk of being unable to enforce agreements and being required to return money and other property and to pay compensation regardless of whether they had had knowledge of third parties' contraventions of the General Prohibition.
- For all the reasons set out above, Options should have concluded Caledonian was giving advice, or have suspected it was (and it seems it did belatedly draw this conclusion); and it was giving advice to consumers who were not necessarily financially sophisticated.
- As set out above, Options was aware, or ought to have been aware that:

- Caledonian's staff did not have the qualifications – and therefore expertise – to give advice on defined benefit pension transfers.
- There was no evidence to show a proper advice process had been followed and consumers such as Mr M were therefore unable to make a fully informed decision about the transfer to the SIPP and investment.
- The high volume of business being proposed/brought about by Caledonian.
- The high level of commission Caledonian was taking, which may not have been disclosed.
- That Caledonian had failed to provide its company accounts, despite repeated requests for copies of them by Options.
- The investment did not proceed until well after all these things were known to Options and so it was open to it to decline the investment, or at least explore the position with the consumer.

I have therefore gone on to consider the question of fair compensation.

Putting things right

I consider that Options failed to comply with its own regulatory obligations and didn't put a stop to the transactions that are the subject of this complaint. My aim in awarding fair compensation is to return Mr M to the position he would now be in but for Options' failings. Had Options acted appropriately, I think it's more likely than not that Mr M would have remained a member of his occupational pension scheme.

I require that Options calculate fair compensation by comparing the current position to the position Mr M would be in if he had not transferred from his existing pension.

In summary, Options should:

1. Calculate the loss Mr M has suffered as a result of making the transfer.
2. Take ownership of any remaining investments that cannot be surrendered if possible. And waive any future SIPP fees where the Options SIPP needs to be kept open only because of illiquid investments and is used only or substantially to hold that asset.
3. Pay compensation for the loss either to Mr M direct or into his pension, depending on what he chooses. In either case the payment should take into account the necessary adjustments set out below.
4. Pay £500 for the trouble and upset caused to Mr M.

I'll explain how Options should carry out the calculation set out at 1-3 above in further detail as well as explaining my reasons for awarding 4:

1. Calculate the loss Mr M has suffered as a result of making the transfer ("the loss calculation")

Options must undertake a redress calculation in line with the rules for calculating redress for non-compliant pension transfers, as detailed in the FCA's policy statement PS22/13 and set out in the regulator's handbook in DISP App 4:

<https://www.handbook.fca.org.uk/handbook/DISP/App/4/?view=chapter>.

For clarity, as far as I am aware, Mr M has not yet retired, and has no plans to do so at present. So, compensation should be based on his normal retirement age as provided for in the Armed Forces Pension Scheme and following the usual assumptions in the FCA's guidance.

This calculation should be carried out using the most recent financial assumptions in line with DISP App 4. In accordance with the regulator's expectations, this should be undertaken or submitted to an appropriate provider promptly following receipt of notification of Mr M's acceptance of my final decision.

2. Take ownership of any investments held within the SIPP which cannot be surrendered

In order for the SIPP to be closed and further SIPP fees to be prevented, any remaining investment(s) need(s) to be removed from the SIPP. To do this, Options should calculate an amount it is willing to accept as a commercial value for any investments that cannot be surrendered and pay that sum into the SIPP and take ownership of the relevant investments.

If Options is able to purchase the illiquid investment(s) then the price paid to purchase the holding(s) will be allowed for in the current transfer value (because it will have been paid into the SIPP to secure the holding(s)).

If Options is unwilling or unable to purchase the investment(s), the value of them should be assumed to be nil for the purposes of the loss calculation. Options may ask Mr M to provide an undertaking to account to it for the net amount of any payment the SIPP may receive from the investment(s). That undertaking should only take effect once Mr M has been compensated in full, to include his receipt of any loss that may be above our award limit, and should allow for the effect of any tax and charges on the amount Mr M may receive from the investment(s) and any eventual sums he would be able to access. Options should meet any costs in drawing up the undertaking and any reasonable costs for advice required by Mr M to approve it.

If Options doesn't take ownership of the investment(s), and it/they continue to be held in Mr M's SIPP, there will be ongoing fees in relation to the administration of that SIPP. Mr M would not be responsible for those fees if Options hadn't accepted the transfer of his pension into the SIPP. So, I think it is fair and reasonable that Options must waive any SIPP fees until such a time as Mr M can dispose of the investment(s) and close the SIPP.

3. Pay compensation to Mr M for any loss he has suffered as calculated in (1).

If the redress calculation demonstrates a loss, as explained in policy statement PS22/13, and set out in DISP App 4, Options should:

- always calculate and offer Mr M redress as a cash lump sum payment,
- explain to Mr M before starting the redress calculation that:
 - his redress will be calculated on the basis that it will be invested prudently (in line with the cautious investment return assumption used in the calculation), and
 - a straightforward way to invest his redress prudently is to use it to augment his defined contribution pension
- offer to calculate how much of any redress Mr M receives could be used to augment the pension rather than receiving it all as a cash lump sum,
- if Mr M accepts Options' offer to calculate how much of his redress could be augmented, request the necessary information and not charge Mr M for the calculation, even if he ultimately decides not to have any of his redress augmented,

and

- take a prudent approach when calculating how much redress could be augmented, given the inherent uncertainty around Mr M's end of year tax position.

Redress paid directly to Mr M as a cash lump sum in respect of a future loss includes compensation in respect of benefits that would otherwise have provided a taxable income. So, in line with DISP App 4.3.31G(3), Options may make a notional deduction to allow for income tax that would otherwise have been paid. Mr M's likely income tax rate in retirement is presumed to be 20%. In line with DISP App 4.3.31G(1) this notional reduction may not be applied to any element of lost tax-free cash.

Assignment of rights

If Options believes other parties to be wholly or partly responsible for the loss, it is free to pursue those other parties. So, if Mr M's loss does not exceed £195,000, or if Options accepts my recommendation below that it should pay the full loss as calculated above, the compensation payable to Mr M should be contingent on the assignment by him to Options of any rights of action he may have against other parties in relation to his transfer to the SIPP and the investments if Options is to request this. Options should cover the reasonable cost of drawing up, and Mr M's taking advice on and approving, any assignment required.

If the loss exceeds £195,000 and Options does not accept my recommendation to pay the full amount, any assignment of Mr M's rights should allow him to retain all rights to the difference between £195,000 and the full loss as calculated above.

4. Pay £500 for the trouble and upset caused.

Mr M transferred his pension away from a valuable defined benefits pension to a SIPP and had to suffer the loss of those benefits.

I think it's fair to say this would have caused Mr M some distress and inconvenience. So, I consider that a payment of £500 is appropriate to compensate for that.

determination and money award: It's my decision that I require that Options pay Mr M compensation as set out above, up to a maximum of £195,000 plus any interest payable.

As I've said above, until the calculations are carried out, I don't know how much the compensation will be, and it may be nowhere near £195,000, which is the maximum sum that I'm able to award in Mr M's complaint. But I'll also make a recommendation below in the event that the compensation is to exceed this sum, although I can't require that Options pays this.

recommendation: If the amount produced by the calculation of fair compensation exceeds £195,000, I recommend that Options pays Mr M the balance.

If Mr M accepts my final decision, the money award and the requirements of the decision will be binding on Options. My recommendation won't be binding on Options.

Further, it's unlikely that Mr M will be able to accept my final determination and go to court to ask for the balance of the compensation owing to him after the money award has been paid. Mr M may want to consider getting independent legal advice before deciding whether to accept my final decision.

My jurisdiction decision

It's my decision that this complaint was made in time and can be considered by the Financial Ombudsman Service.

My final decision

It's my final decision that I uphold Mr M's complaint. I require that Options UK Personal Pensions LLP calculate and pay the award, and take the actions, set out above.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mr M to accept or reject my decision before 26 March 2025.
