

The complaint

Mrs H complains Revolut Ltd (“Revolut”) hasn’t refunded funds she says she lost as the result of a scam.

What happened

Both parties are familiar with the circumstances of the complaint, so I’ll only summarise the details here.

Mrs H said she saw an investment opportunity advertised online which was supposedly endorsed by a celebrity, she clicked the link and called the number provided. Mrs H said she was contacted by someone we now know to be a scammer. She told us the investment was on the stock exchange, and she invested £200, which she paid with a provider other than Revolut. Mrs H said her investment grew and the scammer told her about another opportunity which she decided to invest in and having seen her investments grow encouraged her to invest further.

Mrs H told us she made payments from her account with a firm I’ll call N to Revolut and another firm I’ll call C, she said she moved the funds on further which were then lost to the scam.

Mrs H said her funds were blocked and she was told she needed to pay various fees and taxes which she found suspicious and after speaking with her daughter she approached Action Fraud believing she had been scammed.

Mrs H complained to Revolut, and her complaint wasn’t upheld. Unhappy with Revolut’s response, Mrs H raised the matter with the Financial Ombudsman Service. One of our Investigators looked into the complaint and didn’t uphold it.

As an agreement could not be reached, the complaint has been passed to me for a final decision.

What I’ve decided – and why

I’ve considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what’s fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

Mrs H has raised other complaints with us related to this scam which I am aware of, where necessary I’ll comment on evidence provided on those complaints which is relevant to Mrs H’s complaint against Revolut.

I’m aware that I’ve summarised this complaint briefly, in less detail than has been provided, and in my own words. No discourtesy is intended by this. Instead, I’ve focused on what I think is the heart of the matter here. If there’s something I’ve not mentioned, it isn’t because I’ve ignored it. I’m satisfied I don’t need to comment on every individual point or argument to be able to reach what I think is the right outcome. Our rules allow me to do this. This simply reflects the informal nature of our service as a free alternative to the courts.

I'm sorry that Mrs H has been the victim of a scam. I realise she's lost a significant sum of money, and I don't underestimate the impact this has had on her. However, just because a scam has occurred, it doesn't mean she's automatically entitled to recompense by Revolut. It would only be fair for me to tell Revolut to reimburse Mrs H for her loss (or a portion of it) if I thought Revolut ought reasonably to have prevented all, or some, of the payments Mrs H made, or if I believed Revolut hindered the recovery of the payments Mrs H made – whilst ultimately being satisfied that such an outcome was fair and reasonable for me to reach.

In broad terms, the starting position at law is Revolut are expected to process payments and withdrawals that a customer authorises it to make. I appreciate Mrs H didn't intend for her money to end up in the hands of a scammer, that Mrs H said the scammer made the payments on her behalf and that she was aware they were doing so. Therefore, the payments are considered as authorised. Meaning under the Payment Services Regulations 2017 (PSR 2017) Mrs H is presumed liable for the loss in the first instance. However, there are some situations when Revolut should have had a closer look at the wider circumstances surrounding a transaction before allowing it to be made.

Considering the relevant: law and regulations; regulators' rules, guidance and standards; codes of practice; and, where appropriate, what I consider to be good industry practice at the time - Revolut should fairly and reasonably:

- Have been monitoring accounts to counter various risks, including preventing fraud and scams.
- Have had systems in place to look out for unusual transactions or other signs that might indicate that its customers were at risk of fraud (among other things). This is particularly so given the increase in sophisticated fraud and scams in recent years, which payment service providers are generally more familiar with than the average customer.
- In some circumstances, take additional steps, or make additional checks, before processing a payment, or in some cases decline it altogether, to help protect customers from the possibility of financial harm from fraud.
- Have acted to avoid causing foreseeable harm to customers, for example by maintaining adequate systems to detect and prevent scams and by ensuring all aspects of its products, including the contractual terms, enabled it to do so.

So, I've thought about whether the transactions should have highlighted to Revolut that Mrs H might be at a heightened risk of financial harm from fraud.

Revolut intervened prior to processing some of the payments including speaking with Mrs H on the phone.

I don't believe I need to make a finding on whether Revolut ought to have intervened on more payments than it did or if its interventions went far enough to establish the circumstances of the payments or not as having considered things carefully, I'm not persuaded that any intervention from Revolut would have uncovered the scam. I'll explain why.

Having reviewed Mrs H's conversations with Revolut it makes it clear that she should be honest and asks questions regarding the payment and the circumstances around it and why she opened an account with Revolut. Mrs H is consistent that she opened the account after research she carried out in order to pay friends and family abroad and that she is paying an old friend who lent her money. Revolut probes her on this and when it asked for evidence of the borrowed funds, she said they were paid into her daughter's account and by cash. Mrs H confirms no one has asked her to make the payment or asked her to lie and that she hasn't downloaded remote access software, which we know wasn't the case. She is asked specifically if she is investing and says no.

Mrs H's told us she was given the cover story by the scammer that she was making payments to friends/family and given the destinations of the payments this would have been plausible to Revolut.

Additionally, Mrs H deposited funds from her account with N to her new account with Revolut. N spoke with Mrs H prior to processing some of the payments and asked her for the reason she was making them. Mrs H wasn't forthcoming during these interventions either and didn't disclose that she intended to invest the funds and said nobody told her to move her funds or lie. This meant the scam warnings she received weren't relevant to the scam she was falling victim to and so the scam wasn't uncovered by N.

A firm's intervention relies on a customer giving accurate answers and where they don't, as is the case with Mrs H as I've described, it can impact the actions a firm takes.

Given Mrs H's interactions with both Revolut and N, along with the coaching she'd received from the scammer, I'm not persuaded that any intervention from Revolut would have uncovered the scam or prevented Mrs H from making the payments. I think she was under the scammer's spell to such a degree that, on balance, she would have maintained her cover story and not disclosed the true nature of the payments or circumstances surrounding them.

I've also thought about the Contingent Reimbursement Model which is a voluntary code, and as Revolut isn't a signatory the code isn't relevant here.

Scammers typically move funds on quickly to avoid having them returned to their victims and given Mrs H reported the scam to Revolut around two months after the final payment was made, I don't think there was any chance of successful recovery of Mrs H's funds.

I'm sorry to disappoint Mrs H further, but I've thought carefully about everything that has happened, and with all the circumstances of this complaint in mind I don't think Revolut needs to refund Mrs H's money or pay compensation. I realise this means she's out of pocket and I'm really sorry she's lost this money. However, for the reasons I've explained, I don't think I can reasonably require Revolut to reimburse her losses.

My final decision

My final decision is that I do not uphold this complaint against Revolut Ltd.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I'm required to ask Mrs H to accept or reject my decision before 2 January 2026.
