

complaint

This complaint is about a credit card payment protection insurance (PPI) policy taken out in 1994. Mrs R says Lloyds Bank PLC (trading as TSB) mis-sold her the PPI.

my findings

I've considered all the available evidence and arguments to decide what is fair and reasonable in the circumstances of this complaint.

We've set out our general approach to complaints about the sale of PPI on our website and I've taken this into account in deciding Mrs R's case.

I've decided the policy wasn't mis-sold because:

- I think Lloyds made it clear that Mrs R didn't have to take out the PPI and she chose to take it out – although I can understand why she can't remember this. I say this because Lloyds has given me a copy of the credit card agreement. There is section which provides the option to select PPI – there are boxes to select or decline PPI. The box to choose PPI has been selected. Mrs R has also signed the agreement, so I think this reflected what she wanted. I can see other products on the agreement have not been selected so if Mrs R didn't want the PPI she could've also left this box blank.

Mrs R has also said she was not aware the PPI had been added but the PPI would have appeared on her monthly credit card statements. So if she had not chosen to take the PPI I would have expected her to question this sooner than she did.

- Lloyds recommended the PPI to Mrs R so it had to check that the PPI was right for her – and based on what I've seen of her circumstances at the time, I think that it was. For example she wasn't affected by any of the exclusions to or limits on the PPI cover and she seems to have had a need for the cover.
- It's possible the information Lloyds gave Mrs R about the PPI wasn't as clear as it should've been. But she chose to take it out - so it looks like she wanted this type of cover. And it seems like it would have been useful for her if something went wrong. It also looks like it was affordable. So I don't think better information about the PPI would have put her off taking out the cover.
- Which means Lloyds doesn't have to pay back all of the cost of the PPI to Mrs R.

But Lloyds will pay back some of the cost of the PPI to Mrs R because:

- When the policy was sold, Lloyds expected to get a high level of commission and profit share (more than 50% of the PPI premium) - so it should have told Mrs R about that. Because Lloyds didn't tell Mrs R, that was unfair.
- To put that right, Lloyds has basically offered to pay back the amount of commission and profit share that was above 50% of the PPI premium - and I think that offer is fair in this case.

I've thought about everything Mrs R has said - including what she has said about her sick pay benefits. Mrs R's benefits would have reduced after six months and she only had a limited amount of savings. This policy would have paid a monthly benefit for up to 12 months and in addition to any sick pay she might have got and she could have found the policy useful. So these points don't change my decision.

what the business needs to do

Lloyds has to pay back to Mrs R any commission and profit share it got that was more than 50% of the PPI premium. Lloyds should also pay back to Mrs R any extra interest she paid because of that.

Lloyds should re-work the credit card account and pay back to Mrs R the difference between what she owes and what she would've owed if the commission and profit share it got hadn't been over 50% of the cost of the PPI. Lloyds should also pay Mrs R 8%* simple interest if she paid off her credit card at some point.

*Businesses have to take basic rate tax off this interest. Mrs R can claim back the tax if she doesn't pay tax.

my final decision

The PPI policy wasn't mis-sold – so Lloyds Bank PLC does not have to pay back all of the cost of the PPI to Mrs R.

But Lloyds Bank PLC does have to pay back to Mrs R any commission and profit share it got that was more than 50% of the PPI premium.

Under the rules of the Financial Ombudsman Service, I am required to ask Mrs R to accept or reject my decision before 26 April 2018.
